Home Town Paper

To-day no small part of the city postman's sack is made up of tightly rolled, cylindrical objects whose delivery is expectantly awaited alike in placid home and busy office, and which, opened, reveal a digest of doings in distant communities.

With the writings of lengthy, leisurely l tters an all but vanished art, the transplanted city dweller is finding in the old home paper a welcome substitute. It represents a printed panorma of the small town life of which he once was a part, enabling him to visualize the comings and goings, the sayings and sojourns of former acquaintances and intimates.

Big-city residents, contrasting its modest bulk with their own mattress-like publications, may be inclined to view lightly this unpretentious result of small town journalism, but to the subscriber it is welcomed as a refreshing visitor from home, a chatty "country cousin" who, while eager to impart the news, is equally ready to depart once he has given it.

Through "typographic television," the former citizen of the small community sees the friendly merchant with whom he formerly traded, departing on a vacation trip and is glad the affairs seem to be improving for hime. Through the same medium he mingles with the Saturday afternoon crowds on Main street, renewing all but forgotten associat tions.

Although its circulation may be limited, the home town paper's sphere of influence is large. Its regular reading by former residents refreshes with recollections, fragile wither in the arid air of mere busyness an sucess.

MRS. GEO. JONES PASSES

FARM PAPER TO PLAY IMPORTANT WAR TIME ROLL

A progressive policy for 1940 designed to help the farmer adapt himself to changing war-time conditions, has been announced by the Family Herald and Weekly Star.

Throughout 1940 Family Herald articles, written by staff editors in co-opperation with leading agricultural experts, will show how the farmer may plan to avoid losses through changing markets . . . how he can take advantage of new opportunities that are likely to present themselves as a result of hte war.

Because the markets for bacon, wool, and, to some extent, beef, are likely to be profitable ones, the Family Herald will feature practical, specially prepared articles on the raising of hogs, sheep and beef cattle. Articles showing how poultry production may be started, increased and adjusted to war conditions also will be featured.

Prior to the War, vegetables and root seeds were brought into Canada in considerable quantities. This year the Family Herald will show how many Canadian farmers can grow some of these seeds as a cash crop. Apples, grass seed and flax will be discussed.

It is evident that the progressive, go-ahead policy of the Family Herald noted in 1939 will be maintained throughout 1940. With its coast-to-coast distribution to over 300,000 Canadian farm homes, this influential, seventy year old Farm weekly will render real service to the Dominion and to the Empire through its praise-worthy efforts in showing famers how their farm operations may most profitably be conducted during wartime.

HOME POULTRY CANNING EASILY DONE ON FARM

Poultry meat can be canned as any other product, Five general rules should be observed in connection with it. 1. Use fresh properly cooled meat. 2. Remove bone, gristle and excess fat. Pack in jars or cans. 3 Sterilize one hour at 15lb. pressure, or three hours in water bath. 4. Seal as soon as removed from sterilizer, and 5. Jars containing meat should not be allowed to cool while inverted because the fat will harden at the top of the jar.

There are two methods of canning poultry. The first is: kill the birds, then thoroughly cool and draw. Wash carefully, Disjoint legs and wings. Cut breast from legs and wings. Dip pieces in boiling water, then in cool. Drain and pack in glass jars. Make a broth by cooking the back, breast bone, neck and other parts in salted water one hour. Drain and pour over meat in jars. Adjust rubber rings and tops of jars or sealers. Partially seal. Sterilize.

The second method is as follows:—Kill birds and draw at onee. Wash carefully and thoroughly cool. Cut into joints. Cover with water and cook until meat can be removed from bones. Pack meat in jars. Strain broth and allow 1-2 teaspoon salt to each cup. Pour over meat. Adjust rubber rings and tops of jars or sealers. Partially seal. Sterilize.

To can chicken stock.—Cover with cold water bones, skin, and any small bits of chicken. Simmer slowly until all meat drops from bones. Strain and pour broth into jars or cans. Add 1-2 teaspoon of salt to each pint and sterilize 90 minutes in water bath or 50 minutes at 10 lb. pressure.

The household bulletin "Home Preservation of Meats, Poultry and Soup," may be obtained free on application to Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agiculture, at Ottawa.

The difference between a friend and an acquaintance, says a writer, is that a friend will loan you money. And he might have added that the lending of money often transforms a friend into a very casual acquaintance.
