Live Stock Report

(By Dunn & Levack)

On Monday, cattle prices advanced to a new high for the year, some choice weghty steers selling at 8.75, and the balance of the sales were steady to strong on all other classes of cattle. Lambs were steady at 13.75 for choice. Hogs sold on live grade at 8.25.

Choice weighty steers ranged from 8.25 to 8.75, fair to good 7.50 to 8.00. Choice butcher cattle were in strong demand at from 7.50 to 8.00,, fair to good 7.00 to 7.40, common to medium 6.00 to 6.75. Choice baby beeves were steady at from 8.50 to 9.00, fair to good 7.50 to 8.25. Stockers and feeders were in light supply, and best selected kind brought 6.75 to 7.00, medium 6.00 to 6.50. Cows were, choice from 5.50 to 6.00, fair to good 4.75 to 5.25, common to medium 4.00 to 4.50, canners and cutters 3.00 to 3.50. Choice butcher bulls brought from 6.00 to 6.50, good heavy bulls 5.25 to 5.50, common light bolognas 4.50 to 5.00.

Choice spring lambs brought 13.75, with those of good quality 11.00. Unfinished lambs not wanted. Prospects are that prices will work lower, as soon as lambs begin to come forward in larger numbers. Choice sheep brought 4.00 to 5.00, others downward to 3.00. Choice veal calves sold at from 9.50 to 10.00, tops at 10.50, fair to good 8.50 to 9.25, common to medium 5.50 to 7.00.

Hogs held steady at 8.25 live graded, and on the rail basis at various prices. Sows were in heavy supply and prices unsatisfactory. Prospects are that hog prices will be higher, as commission salesmen are working hard to secure an advance.

Bees were brought to America from Europe and the Indians called them "white man's flies."

SPRING HAT YEARS AGO TRIAL TO FINGERS AND NERVES

At this time of year, 50 and more years ago, when housewives in the country and villages had spring sewing done or well underway, including cottonade or denim smocks and pants for men and boys, print and gingham dresses for the girls, their thoughts invariably turned to something considered in the light of luxury, namely, headgear.

A new hat seemed just as indispensable then, perhaps more so than it is today.

Fingers apt enough to handle needle and thread for what they called plain sewing, were handicapped and not nimble enough, and minds appeared not original enough to conceive suitable ideas to manipulate fabrics, feathers, quills and ornaments to give the finishing touch to Sunday's best apparel, a fashionable and at the same time, a becoming hat.

Women would vie with one another in their endeavors to produce something distinctive in the way of sunbonnets for everyday use, but as they were all fashioned from patterns of similar style, any striking difference was seen in the colors and designs of the calico or print from which they were made.

But the important thing, the "Sunday bonnet" was seldom, if ever, homemade.

To get what was considered "proper style," women came long distances to what we will call our town, namely Flesherton.

The usual conveyance by which customers came to town was with horse and buggy.

Country folk not infrequently drove up to the stores or shopping places in wagons. But whether they came in buggies or wagons, it was the exception when they did not bring with them to trade for merchandise, crocks and firkins of butter and baskets of eggs.

And when the matter of the new hat was up for consideration, they went to the millinery department of a dry goods store, where they were met by a milliner who seated them before a mirror where buckram and other shapes were tried on until a suitable selection was made.

After that the question of the most appropriate adornment in the way of trimming had to be decided.

It was at this juncture that quills, feathers, plumes, ribbons, artificial flowers and ornaments of many kinds came into play. When every detail was satisfactorily treated, the milliner made entries in her note book, added the names to her list and arranged a date for "try ons."

Oftentimes the milliner with her staff of assistants, numbering as many as eight young women, would have the names of more than a hundred of those who were wanting hats sooner than they could possibly turn them out.

In the spring season, which was usually April and May, the girls would come back to work at least every second night, and with deft fingers ply needles and thread, and manipulate trimmings until nearly 12 o'clock.

The delivery boy on different occasions on Saturday nights was more than a mile from the store at midnight taking hats to customers that had been promised in time for Sunday wear. And at times, hats would be taken to homes on Sunday morning.

The delivery boy did all his going and coming on foot, and at times would be on hand at 5 o'clock Monday morning to pack the butter that had been received Saturday.

The girls would appear at the store to work at night with an air of gentility, but as time wore on, expressions changed. They would start trimming smart straw hats or buckram shapes, say with ribbons; arranging and rearranging, trimming and untrimming, for the bows were tied and untied, taken off and put on, and taken off again, with a look of impatience and discontent.

No longer do girls enter the workroom in some store in the smaller towns to learn to make shapes and trim hats. The hats are, for the most part, made in factories in the city; then they are distributed among stores throuhout the country, where merchants display them in windows and on stands and seek efficient salesladies to sell them.

No longer does a delivery boy go hither and yon afoot delivering hats in paper bags and band-boxes; no longer does he put oil in lamps and trim the wicks to be ready for use in the workroom; no longer does he witness milliners impatiently at work on headgear while the clock is nearing the hour of midnight.

It is true that stores still keep open just as late as ever, but the fact is that the system of business is conducted on an entirely different basis to what it was 50 years ago.

Human nature is such that women of today may still look upon a becoming, fashionable hat as being the crowning glory of their spring apparel, but all they have to do is walk into a store where up-to-date hats are on exhibit, choose something to their liking and walk out with it on.

"How many brothers have you?"
"Two alive and one in America."
