The story is told by a weekly editor not more than a thousand miles from where we write, of an ironic example of what things are handed out to the local paper and job printing plant by a merchant in the same community who has profited more or less by the local sheet's efforts to get the populace to spend their money in their home community. We are told on information which came, as is said these days, from an "unimpeachable source" that this merchant we are speaking of decided to have a sale. He got posters in Toronto and then came to the local office and asked for the loan of their mailing list.
