

1986...in the news

• In January, anyone having more than three cats in one house in the urban areas will be breaking the law, unless they are licensed breeders. Council passed the bylaw setting that limit after complaints from resident Mark Poullos that one home harbours 30 cats and they are said to be roaming the neighbourhood.

• Georgetown native Bryan Lewis officiated his 1,000th NHL game at the Montreal Forum in January. The event was originally supposed to be marked at a game in Toronto in December but Lewis had his wrist broken in some robust action.

• Regular customers will not soon forget a price protest that allowed them to buy gas at 39.9 cents a litre at MacPherson's Esso on Hwy. 7. The station, located on the crest of Norval Hill, was swamped by long line-ups of anxious customers trying to capitalize on the gas bargain four to five cents a litre below competitors.

• In April, five enterprising youngsters discovered one way to earn money—by selling rocks. Called rock people, they sold for 25 cents. Entrepreneurs are Marie Dickey, 9, Christian Gravelle, 11, Jeff Dickey, 11, David Cairns 6, Michael Cairns, 9, and Jason Ogden, 10.

This is my first year anniversary in my new career of Real Estate. I have loved everything so far and continue to learn every day. The entire team at Royal LePage Meadowtowne Realty Brokerage has been more supportive and encouraging than I could have imagined. The inspiration and motivation I feel pushes me to greater success each day. To my friends, family and clients, I thank you for everything. I look forward to many years in Real Estate, and my passion and belief will continue to be the foundation as I head into year two.
