PANIC-STRICKEN POLES DRIVEN FROM HOME

Nazis are driving panic-stricken Poles from their homes in Polish territories now incorporated in the German Reich. The deportations affect all districts, all classes of people. In the districts of Gostynin and Kutno small land owne have been expropriated, landless peasants driven out. Five hundred persons, Polish business men and merchants, were expropriated in Kutno in one night. taken to the General Government in cattle trucks. Their journey to Zamosc lasted five weeks, during which they received no cooked food and remained endless periods at wayside stations where 40 children died.

Out of one transport of 1,200 Poles from the west to Piotrkow, 229 children died, besides several adults.

Only seventeen children survived the journey.

Children were separated from their parents and taken into the Reich.

Throughout the most severe part of last winter, deportation from the Pomorze provinces of Lodz and Poznan continued. From the small district of Kosciany, 800 peasants were

We notice where an address was given to weekly newspaper publishers on the importance of restoring purchasing power to the farmers. The idea is sound and right, but the trouble is that so far we have done everything else under the sun except restore purchasing power to the farmers.

May be a rather good season after all. The spinach is not coming along the way it used to.

Many a man has ruined his reputation by eating something with a spoon which should have been attended to with a fork.

A Seattle man got a divorce on the grounds that his 62-year-old wife had sulked with him for three years because he had frustrated her attempt to beat him with a poker. Said he: "I guess it made her kind of peeved." Some husbands are like that; won't let their wives have a little fun.
