DO NOT SEND MACTHES THROUGH THE MAILS

Nothwithstanding repeated warnings the Post Office Departments again brings to the attention of the public against sending matches or lighter-fluid through the mails. A short time ago when a bag of ordinary mail was being emptied on the opening table at the Base Post Office one of the parcels burst into flames. Examination of the package revealed that among its contents were six boxes of matches, one of which had become ignited and caused the fire. Such a blaze might easily have resulted in huge loss to the other mails. Do not mail any inflammable article, it is too dangerous.

Lone British Fighter Pilot Captures German E-Boat

An amazing duel in the Mediterranean was reported recently in which a British fighter pilot lost his plane but returned safely in a captured German E.boat. While on a reconnaissance he spotted the E-boat "snooping around." Making repeated low-leved attacks he sprayed the E-boat with bullets from stem to stern, putting her gun-turret out of action. Realizing he had no possible chance of making base he "landed" his plane almost along-side the E-boat, scrambled out of the cockpit, swam to the E-boat and climbed aboard her. There he found most of the crew killed and the remainder wounded. A few minutes' tinkering enabled him to start the engine and gave him the very pleasant experience of piloting a German-E-boat into an Allied harbor.

Axis Shipping Losses Rise

In two months, British aircraft and submarines destroyed three times as much Axis tonnage as Britain lost by enemy action, despite the fact, as Mr. Churchill said, that British ships presented ten or even twenty, times the targets on the seas that the enemy did. At the end of September, Mr. Churchill revealed that Axis sea losses had gone up 50 percent since he made his previous statement. Our drawing, made by an artist from authentic details shows one incident in Britain's successful war aganst Axs suipply lanes. A British Beaufort, on patrol off the coast of Norway, attacked and sank a German supply ship despite the fact that the vessel was escorted by a German Messerschmitt 109 fighter. The British plane beat off the Messerschmitt's attack and sent the German crashing into the sea with two bursts of its machine guns.
