German Prisoners Captured in Libya

After a stubborn but ineffectual resistance the German and Italian mechanized forces and infantry concentrated in Libya under General Rommel were smashed by the British Eighth Army and the remnants brought to bay at Agedabia, near the frontier of Tripolitania, which thus was in British hands for the second time in twelve months. A short time afterward the British troops were forced to retire and most of the ground gained again went into enemy hands.

This picture, taken early in the British advance, shows a lorry-load of German North Afrika Corps panzer prisoners captured by the British in Libya moving off to a concentration point.

The man who keeps in tune with the times is certain to run into plenty of static.

A professor of physiological hygiene says that our Canadian diet is lacking in minerals. But no one says we lack sand.

According to an Ottawa decree, suits from now on will have only one pair of trousers. But what will be expected of a man who is having his trousers cleaned and pressed?

EVERETTE PARKER TELLS ABOUT LEAVE IN ENGLAND

L.A.C. Everette Parker, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Parker, has been on furlough and visited many places in southern England, among them being the birthplace of his Grand father Parker in Yorkshire. He was also in London. Re print a few paragraphs from his interesting letters:

I passed by exams and now I am on leave. I was fourth in a class of 26. Dick and I had been posted to different stations, so we planned to spend some time together in the big city. Friday was for nothing else than to speak on the broadcast and we were in line by 12 o'clock. We hung around until four when the show started. What sensation the few minutes before we went on! What did we say? I have been wondering. Saturday afternoon we went ti hear the London Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday we went to see some of the boys from McMaster who became Pilot Officers. They were sitting pretty in the best hotel in England. Believe it or not, three of them were on the flat which Lord Halifax uses when in London. For "tea" in the afternoon the bill came to 10s, about $2.50.

I saw the chapel where Thomas Parker preached. His grave is in Long Preston. Polly Parker, now Mrs. Whitehead, is still living about two miles from where I am. When I went to see her I enquired from a man where she lived. He wheeled around and I followed him. I found out that he was married to her daughter. Polly turned out to be a very pleasant person. I promised to return to see them again.

This afternoon I went out to Cricklewood, a section of London, to see Miss Hickling, sister of Mr. Hickling of Flesherton, but she was not living there now as she was bombed out. I later called her at her work and made an appointment. I was very pleased to meet her and it was very interesting to talk to her about people she knew when she was in Flesherton.

From now on I will b on Government stac, which will be much better than being a "trainee."

During my leave I have travelled between 800 and 900 miles. Three rides took me 200 miles. Today at dinner I sat opposite a chap who asked me where I came from and was surprised when he said he had been in Flesherton sveral times, as he camped beside the lake on John Dow's farm different years. It was interesting to hear him tell about the camping, when I knew the place so well.

BINDER TWINE FOR 1942

Farmers will not go short on their binder twine requirements to harvest the 1942 crop, but will have to find other types of rope than manila for other farm uses, as result of restrictions which have been placed on the sale of manila fibre, which largely come from the Philipines, and the government has taken steps to conserve available supplies of both manila fibre and rope for essential purposes.

If it wasn't for the other fellow there wouldn't be any auto accidents.
