Two Countries Covet The Azores

(By Hugh Templin)

The stories for the past two weeks have been about the group of islands in the Atlantic known as the Bermudas, or, more generally, simply Bermuda. This week, I will tell of the other group of Atlantic islands at which the Clipper lands on its way to Europe.

Nobody could have known much less about the Azores than we did before flying to Europe. We remembered the first line of the poem that used to be in some of the readers. It was about the last flight of "Revenge." It began "At Flores in the Azores, Sir Richard Grenville lay." You remember how Sir Richard and his sick crew went out against the might of Spain and did a lot of damage before being over-powered.

We realized that the Azores were islands somewhere off the coast of Portugal. They had been used by the first Americans to fly across the Atlantic. We used to think that was cheating because they claimed to be the first to cross the ocean in planes but they came down twice on the way across. As it happened we came down four times.

Two of these landings were at Harta, in the Azores, on the island of Fayal, if we recall. (We couldn't be too sure.)

They are not little islands, these lands a thousand miles or so from Portugal, to which they belong, and they weren't built up by little coral animals either, as the Bermudas were They are volcanic islands, and at least one volcano remains, on the Island of Pico, opposite Horta. It is distinctly of the volcanic type, and as we flew past the crater of it, we believed that we saw smoke still coming out of it, though it may have been just the clouds.

As the Clipper came within sight of the Azores, we watched curiously for our first sight of Europe. It was a rocky shoreline, with a rock off the tip with a hole in it, which might have been Perce Rock, off our own Gaspe shore.

Clippers Land at Horta

Horta is the landing place for the Clippers (if a seaplane can be said to "land"). It is a small city with most of the houses white, and the others painted light pink and light blue, true pastel shades, with red roofs. It was quite picturesque.

The harbour is an artificial one, with concrete breakwater, a large Portugese destroyer was anchored It had a big "V" on the stern. but this wasn't an Allied "V for Victory" sign, but an identification, for the name of the ship was "Vouga." Nearby was a large German merchant ship interned. since early in the war There had been two, but the other one got away with the crews of both on board. The sailors from the "Vouga" were out on the flat breakwater, drilling.

It was early morning, 7.35 by the Azores time, 4.35 by my watch which still showed New York time. Night had been three hours shorter than usual.

A Pan American launch came out and took us to shore. The breakwater was built of stone. Along the top ran a cobbelestone road. Along it, donkeys, oxen, mules and horses hauled little carts. Many of them

BUFFALO CALVES ATTRACT VISITORS TO WILDER'S LAKE

Visitors from far and near have been to Wilder's Lake, the beautiful game preserve owned by Hon. Dr. Jamieson, located a short distance east of Durham. One of the big attractions there at the present time is two buffalo calves. Those fortunate enough to find the herd near the road are thrilled by the sight of six grown buffalo and the two calves born this year. The calves bear a resemblance to Jersey calves, except that they have larger heads and are more heavily built. By winter time they will be a good size, as they grow rapidly.

The original pair of buffalo were procured eighteen years ago from Wainwright National Park. They were on exhibit at the Toronto Exhibition that year prior to being shipped to Durham. The herd is always in prime condition, their pasture grounds being extensive. The animals are fed in winter.

For travelling the bride wore a Queens blue crepe dress, English tweed coat, with matching felt hat and accessories. After a short honeymoon in Northern Ontario, Mr. and Mrs. McMullen will reside in Hamilton.

Goats are said to enjoy a meal of poison ivy. This merely increases our feeling that goats are outragously eccentric.

Julius Caesar, a contemporary tells us, originated the one-way street. The one-track mind, of course, is even older than that.

One by one they go before us,
They are fading like the dew.
But we know they're watching o'er us,
They, the good, the fair, the true,
They are waiting for us only
Where no pain can ever mar
Dear ones who left us lonely
Watch us through the gates ajar.

Laugh and grow fat is fine—until you succeed. Then its no laughing matter.

Magazined Needed For Navy League

Have you grought in the magazines that you have finished reading? Some other persons would be glad to have them, now that you are through with them. The Navy League of Canada wish to have them to place at the disposal of sailors when they come off duty while preserving our life lines on the high seas. Quite a number have been brought in but there are not enough yet. They may be left in the care of Alex. Henderson at the butcher shop and they will be sent to the proper authorities for distribution to the sailors. Do this little thing now and bring them in. While it is a small matter to you, it is big to the sailors, so think of them and help make their free moments more enjoyable.
