The Positano family of Georgetown South's home on Killaloe Cres. will likely be one of the busier stops for trick-or-treating on Halloween night— if only to get a photograph taken with a replica Batmobile. Dad Mario Positano constructed Batman's ride in about a week, with some help from wife Cindy, daughter Julianna and son Luis. Photo by Eamonn Maher

Resident goes batty for Halloween

Every year, Georgetown South resident Mario Positano likes to decorate the interior and exterior of his home in a different Halloween theme and this year, he's gone Gotham.

Positano, the lead technologist and instructor in Sheridan College's BAA animation program for the past decade, unveiled his Batmobile model to his Killaloe Cres. neighbours a couple of weekends ago and he expects the family home will be a popular destination tonight (Thursday).

"A couple of years ago, we did a car crash in the driveway, which, looking back, I think was a bit too much. A couple of people called the cops because they thought it was a real accident," he chuckled.

"We get together as neighbours three or four times a year and I always take Halloween. It's my time of year and me and my kids (Luis and Julianna) have a lot of fun with it."

Originally, Positano wanted to do a Hall of Justice theme this year, but scaled back those grandiose plans after realizing that a 10- to 15-foot-high structure likely wouldn't have held up well in bad weather.

On past Halloweens, Positano has turned his front lawn into a graveyard, and last year, a UFO crash scene complete with eight little green aliens.

Ouch.

Haunted House benefits Sanctuary

A haunted house will be held from dusk to 9:30 p.m. tonight (Thursday) at 15 Bairstow Cres. in Georgetown with entry being any cash donation to the Cedar Row Farm Sanctuary that tends to abused animals. The haunted house is 40-feet long and features over 120 feet of haunted hallways and passageways. There will be multiple actors and numerous theatrical effects including smoke, lights, music and projections. There will be candy for the kids and hot drinks for the adults.
