EDITORIAL NOTES

Apparently this is an open winter allright. The door must have been left open, as the storms have been blowing right through and there is more snow now than we have had for several years. Will someone please shut the door.

Forty thousand young Ontario men have failed to answer the call of the Mobilization Board and present themselves for military training—the defence of Canada. On the face of it, it looks quite a staggering figure, as though many of them were attempting to escape military service. No doubt there are hundreds who have not answered the call, and are awaiting the day when "they" will come and take them, as they do not intend to report until made to do so. On the other hand there are hundreds who have received their notice to report and have immediately enlisted for active service and failed to report their actions. Others had already enlisted in the Air Force or the Navy and they, too, did not pay any attention to their notice to report. Still other cases are reported that notice was sent to young men who had been overseas with the Air Force and had made the supreme sacrifice. Imagine the feelings of the parents when such a letter was received by them. It looks bad for Ontario to have so many men who did not report for military duty, but we don't imagine that Ontario's record is as black as painted, and some research work by the Boards would no doubt clear up the situation.

There is a shortage of beef on the Canadian markets at the present time and the trouble has been laid at the feet of the farmer for not marketing his fat cattle and relieving the situation. But the farmer is only human and has had trouble enough the past few years without throwing away the chance of making a few extra dollars. The price ceiling for cattle will again be raised during the next few months and the farmers are holding their stock for higher prices. Why blame them? Why not place the blame where it belongs and urge the Wartime Prices and Trade Board to raise the price of beef to the farmers, and we guarantee that the shortage would disappear. There also should be a minimum price to assure the farmers a sufficient return on his investment when the beef goes to market with the raise in price. There has not been sufficient attention paid to the representatives of farmers when they have urged certain action to be taken to ensure stable prices for farm produce.

Labor has been organized for years in Canada and have been thus enabled to improve the position of the laboring man in regard to conditions of labor in industry and wage rates. Manufacturers have been organized and they, also, have been enabled to gain concessions which otherwise would have been unobtainable. Farmers have tried various means to improve their lot, but there was no independent organization which could speak for them alone, and most of the time they have been left sitting high and dry and holding an empty bag. Farmers now have a chance to do something for themselves in the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which has provincial and county organizations, but they have to put their shoulders behind the Federation wholeheartedly. Only a few farmers are giving their support and the remainder are allowing the other fellow to shoulder the load. It is in the interests of every farmer to join the Federation, which is non-poltical and lend their voice to the pleas placed before the government by the Federation. If even half the farmers of Canada lent their support, financial and otherwise, what a bargaining power the officials of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture would have when then went to the government for some specific action to be taken. The government will be only luke-warm to any proposition placed before it if they know that only a small percentage of the farmers are members of the Federation. Assist your own vocation, farmers, and become a member of the Federation of Agriculture.

Neb—"Meet up with any of them city slickers when you was in Toronto?"

Zeb—"Yep, one of them durned hotel fellers. When I told him I just blew in from Flesherton with a load of cattle he says 'Where's the rest of 'em?' Quick as a flash I says, 'Out in the yards. I ain't as particular as they are'."

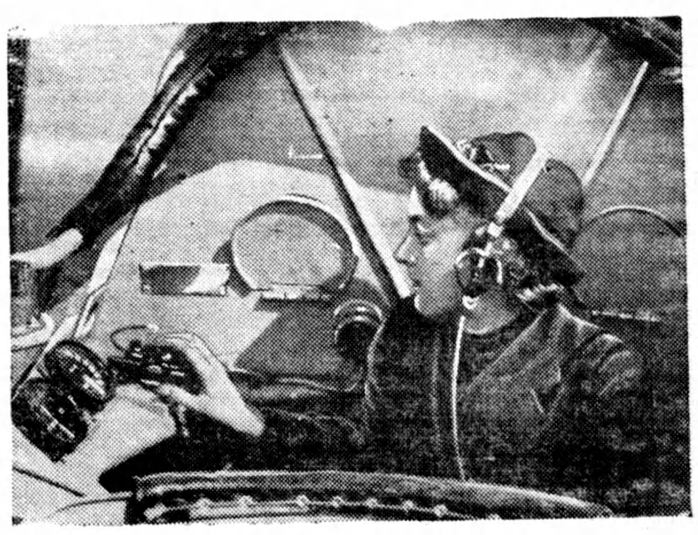
Dusseldorf Damage After Great British Raid on September 10-11

R.A.F. reconnaissance photographers taken after the heavy British bombing attack on Dusseldorf, Germany, September 10-11, show that very considerable damage was inflicted.

Picture Shows: The area immediately surrounding Dusseldorf main railway station. The station itself was severely damaged by a heavy bomb, and has a hole in its roof one hundred yards across. Blast damage can be seen across the main railway track and among sheds. A considerable area to the west of the station is devastated by fire—buildings are almost completely gutted, and few roofs are left.



One of Britain's "Radio Wrens" Flying With the Fleet Air Arm

This "Wren," a member of Britain's Women's Royal Naval Service, before the war was a newspaper reporter. Now her job is testing aircraft radios for Britain's Fleet Air Arm, a task of vital importance needing considerable skill and accuracy. She is seen here before setting out on a radio-testing flight in a torpedo-carrying "Swordfish" Fleet Air Arm 'plane.

Appreciate Your Patronge in 1942

As this is the beginning of the New Year, we are taking the opportunityto thank our patrons for their patronage in the past, and we hope to continue to serve you as good, or better if possible, in the future. We are happy to report that our production has been greater in the past year than in the years past, despite the fact that most rplaces report somewhat of a lower production.

We will be continually in the market for all kinds of poultry.

In co-operation with the town, we will be closed Thursday afternoon and open Saturday evening until 9 o'clock.
