Cathedrals Can be Overdone?

Caen, in Normandy, has come to be familiar to Canadians whose sons have there engaged the huns. In his "Reminiscences" the late Goldwin Smith refers to the town as he saw it in 1847:

"In the magnificent churches of Caen you feel the majesty of (William) the conqueror. At Falaise the Castle still looks down upon the tanneries, as in the days when Robert the Devil wooed the tanner's daughter. There lie Walter, Count of Mantes, and his wife, daughter of Herbert Wake-Dog, reputed victims of William the Conqueror by poisoning."

History still crowds into Caen, and it once again takes its old-time place, representing a new scene in the shifting drama of Europe's tragedy. This time, players from over the seas are joined with those from Europe and Britain in a vivid play conceived by a Satanic playwright.

We have heard nothing of the "magnificent churches in Caen" in the invasion news, since that town was roused from its slumber and attention once more focused upon its storied past.

Again, it is to be noted that as violence raises its head, the ancient churches, magnificent monuments to long-past religious fervor and oppression, have become opportune targets for shell and bomb. As they fall before the destroyers, questionings arise as to the wisdom and indeed the necessity of erecting such architectural monuments in the name of religion.

It is recalled that they were built at vast cost, financed by extortions based on the fear of damnation held over them by old religious leaders not above such means of gaining their communities than the formalism of echoing catherdals, ritualistic monuments of a departed day, probably divested of the religious significance which was theirs when stone was laid on stone, and stained glass fashioned in magnificent theme so long ago, and now become somewhat of a liability: magnificent and beautiful though they be.

ONE MAN'S INcome IS ANOTHER MAN'S OUTgo...

IF rising prices and costs were allowed to keep pushing each other up, inflation would be unavoidable. That's what inflation is—a panic rise in prices—with money losing its value and confusion everywhere. To prevent inflation, a ceiling has been set on prices and profits,—wages and salaries have been controlled.

If one person demands higher prices—another higher profits—another a higher wage or salary—soon everybody would be making the same demands—demands on everyone else.

Then costs of production could not be controlled.

The ceiling could no longer be held.

Living costs would go up—
