Back To Civies

"Back to Civvy Street" is the intriguing title of a course for soldiers awaiting discharge from the army in Military District No. 2 and it is sponsored by Major A. R. Ramsey, officer commanding the Rehabilitation Wing for the purpose of initiating the veterans into the mysteries of civilian life.

Most of the boys who will soon doff the khaki for the serge or worsted will find in civilian life a bewildering array of new regulations etc., which did not exist when they shouldered rifles to fight for their ideals.

When Canada's soldiers first went to war, very few folk were bothered about income tax. Now it hits every purse. The returned man is apt to resent this-likely to question the right of anyone to deduct monies from his pay envelope for a tax he never sanctioned. And, in this mood, he might easily tangle with his new employer, causing friction which could easily result in his discharge, or in a sort of permanent misunderstanding. For this reason, the embryo citizen hears some addresses which clarify the tax situation—that is, insofar as that sore subject can ever be interpreted by a layman.

He hears talks on rehabilitation, sees educational movies, and, this is vital, is given a talk. on initiative This might seem strange to a non-military man, who has long cherished the belief that the Canadian soldier leads the world in initiative, in contradiction to the German or Jap, who is so dragooned, or imitative that he lacks ability to think himself. The Canadian soldier has initiative, but it is that bred in the arts of war, and he still looks to his leaders for direction. In going back to private life, he finds that the law of the semi-jungle of civilization "Every Man for Himself" still holds good, and that he must tand on his own feet and help himself if he expects to progress.

From a social standpoint, perhaps the most important feature of the curriculum of "Back to Civvy Street" is the address or lecture entitled "Getting Back to Family Life". In this the soldier is reminded that, when he returned, he was hailed as a hero, but that within a few short weeks his family, friends and acquaintances will cease to regard him as such, that he will slip back into his corner inconspicuous place in the scheme of things. He is reminded that his family has made new friends to add to their circle — he will be expected to adjust himself to these. And he is reminded that perhaps while he has been away, his wife has been making big money in warwork, has become accustomed to an independency which did not prevail before he went to war,and he is told he must make every effort to adjust himself to these changed circumstances if he hopes to continue a happy home life.

Many other aspects of civilian life are discussed, and the soldiers themselves are urged to bring forth their problems for adjustment. "It's just an experiment" said Major Ramsey, "But in the short time it has been operating in helping prospective dischargees readjust themselves, we think it has proved its worth.

Holds Graves of 880 Canadians At Dieppe

In a cemetery on a hill behind Dieppe are the graves of 880 men of the 2nd Canadian Division raid force killed in action there on August 19, 1942. Practically all are Canadians. The graves are numbered and bear no names. But a roll of names is kept by a cemetery attendant.

"The ladder to fame is a fragile thing," muses a poet. Oh, we don't know. Kate Smith climbed it.

"Though the flying bomb is unlikely to change the course of the present war," says a writer on military subjects, "'it is not improbable that it will dominate the next." What does he mean, "next?" asks the Owen Sound Sun-Times. If our peace leaders do their part there will be no next.

Ammunition Permits

A reminder that September 30th is the deadline for applying for permits to buy ammunition for sporting purposes has been issued by W. Harold McPhillips, prices and supply representative for Western Ontario. Essential users of small arms mmunition, including licensed trappers, farmers and prospectors, who desire ammunition for sporting purposes will be treated in the same manner as other applications. They may acquire ammunition for hunting purposes. Applicants must present both a gun registration certificate and a ration book or card. Each person possessing a registered rim fire rifle may apply for a permit to purchase not more than 100 rim fire cartridges and every owner of a registered shotgun may apply for purchase of 50 pot shells.

Mystery Harvester

A farmer in Kent, England, was surprised one morning at harvest time to find that a large part of a field of corn, cut the previous day, had been neatly "shocked." Some kind person, long after working hours had finished, had picked up the sheaves and had stood them in those neat rows which are a familiar feature of harvest fields.

The mystery was solved when Canadian soldiers told that one of their number, passing the field and seeing the sheaves lying on the ground, had changed his mind about spending the evening in a canteen, and had taken off his tunic, rolled up his sleeves and gone to work.
