How Would You Have Sent the Draftees, Mr. Case?

While General McNaughton was getting those 8,300 Draftees across the high seas . . . and had to remain silent . . . you were desk-thumping at your press conferences and accusing him of "Drawing a red herring across the reinforcement issue."

You were calling Canada's great soldier, who built the Canadian Army Overseas "the newest and most discredited yes-man" in your ads.

You, Mr. Case, were doing a lot of talking, while McNaughton was working—and had to stay on the job. Now, Mr. Case, isn't it about time to admit you don't know what it's all about? That you never built an army overseas, like McNaughton?

Also the electors would like to know how YOU would have sent those Draftees, seeing you say "I'm still Opposed to Conscription." (Rocklyn, January 16).

Come on Mr. Case, how would you have sent those Draftees? Do tell us. If not, move over and give a soldier a chance. He knows how.

POSITION OF BEEF PRODUCTION, 1945

In discussing Canada's beef program for 1945, the recent Dominion-Provincial Agricultural Conference estimated that beef marketings would probably reach a record of 1,420,000 head. And there is a market for all of it!

Britain wants Canadian beef and early in 1944, signed a two-year contract for a maximum of 112 million pounds of beef in 1944, and 132 million pounds in 1945. But now there is no maximum, no limit, on the quantity Britain will accept. In 1944 alone Canada delivered approximately 140 million pounds. If Canada can deliver as much or more in 1945 Britain will take it. This assured outlet is now extended to include the year 1946.

In peacetime Canada's export market for surplus beef cattle was the United States but this market was closed to Canadian producers in the latter paret of 1942 by the Dominion Government which is committed however to remove the restrictions when the wartime food needs of Canada and Britain have been met.

So for 1945, Canadian farmers need have no concern about marketing their surplus beef. Domestic and British demand will consume the 1,420,000 head — 8 per cent more than in 1944 — which will be ready for market in 1945.

Nevertheless, even a two-year contract for surplus beef does not warrant further increase in cattle breeding for the years ahead. The conference specifically recommended that there be no further increase in beef herds.

EGGS

This year a heavy production of eggs is again expected and will be far greater than our home market can absorb. No doubt you all know that enormous quantities of eggs were exported to Great Britain last year in powder form to conserve shipping space. Now, the people of the British Isles would sooner have eggs in shell. Since this is our only available export market it is up to the producer and the shipper of eggs to give them the best possible product.

Since it takes considerable time for transit, the duty of the producer is to use every means to keep the eggs clean and to market as frequently as possible. Our duty is to put the eggs in the best possible containers to assure clean and safe arrival. Every egg has to be stamped by us with the word "CANADA" in order that its source will be known. In this way a future market, and we hope a permanent one, will be established for a good product.

THE WAR IS NOT YET WON

The war is not yet won; it is no black pessimism to say that, even a year hence we still may be fighting the Germans, with all that could mean in frightful loss and terrible demand on all our resources. Yet, with that fearsome possibility before us, we are permitting ourselves to fall into foolish wrangling over peace aims and ideologies and doctrines, many of them alien to our way of thinking. It is a course of utter madness.

Trying hard to impress people is about the hardest way to do it.
