A Practical View of Post-War World

Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., one of the world's great captains of industry, has also been doing a little looking into the post-war world, and it doesn't seem to him it will be as amazing and revolutionary as others see it, says the Boston Post. He sees no family airplane and low-cost prefabricated housing projects on a giant scale, among other things. His warning should be heeded. He is no conservative. In his post as chairman of the board of General Motors, he must have initiative and enterprise. but he also must have common sense, be practical and not do much day-dreaming. The average man does not want to be kidded.

OTTAWA REPORTS

That First Centre for Junior Farmer Education Will Open Soon In Cayuga

The first rural youth community centre in Ontario is soon to be set up on the site of the former air training centre at Cayuga. Under the supplementary agricultural, education plan made public in June it is proposed to set up in each county a centre for junior farmer education, for both boys and girls.

A three-months' residential course will be the core of the program. This will be held during the winter months—the slack farm season.

The 22 acres of land and the buildings of the air centre make it eminently suitable for its new service. The large hangar will be divided into classrooms, equipped with all facilities necesary for practical agricultural education The former barracks will be remodelled as quarters for the students and there is a complete kitchen and dining hall. Another building will house farm machinery and will be used for the farm mechanics course.

As for fun—the young farmers will create their own. Provision wil be made for theatricals and sports of various kinds and the large skating rink which was built for the air trainees will be open to them.

The initiative in requesting the creation of a community centre must come from youth farm organizations. By their pledge of support, the project is assured of success under the province-wide plan.

The Edmonton-Whitehorse-Snag air route, over which thousands of airplanes and thousands of tons of supplies for Russia and for defence of North America were flown, was built and completed during the dark first few years of the war. In 1942 and 1943 it enabled a successful defence against Japanese intentions in the Aleutians.

North-West Air Command, with headquarters at Edmonton, has full control of the operation and maintenance of the aerodromes and flight strips along the route. All installations of continuing value along the route, which have cost some $76,000,000 are owned by Canada.

Military trucks, declared surplus from the army, may now be sold direct to farmers. This is possible because liason has been established between the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and War Assets Corporation in a co-operative project in which seven of the provincial departments of agriculture will participate. Under this plan a special price is set on the trucks at which the farmers purchase them without any guarantee of servicing or repairs. Four of such sales have already been held in Ontario and arrangements are being made to hold them in other provinces.

Britain to Retain Emergency Powers

British Labor Government intends to retain wartime emergency powers possibly for five years, Home Secretary James Chuter Ede disclosed in Commons last week.

His statement came soon after the House reassembled to tackle its big budget of work ranging from the economic problems of post-war trade and reconversion to the problems of peacetime foreign policy.

Mr. Ede reminded members that the present Emergency Powers Act would expire Feb. 24, 1946. He announced that the Government would introduce legislation as soon as possible to maintain "the necessary residue of power over the transitional period."

Monty's Double Hoodwinked Nazis

Looking strikingly like Marshal Montgomery and thoroughly rehearsed in the British commander's mannerisms, Lieut Clifton James was sent off to Algiers by high-ranking British Imperial General Staff officers a few days before the historic June 6 and was received at a public ceremony by Field Marshall Sir Henry Maitland Wilson, and drove through Algerian streets lined with cheering people.

Lieutenant James played his part so well the paper said, that fascist agents transmitted the news to Berlin by way of Spain that Marshal Montgomery was away from his invasion base. Subsequent evidence proved D-Day took the Germans by surprise.

British intelligence got the idea after Lieutenant James, walking onto the stage at a soldier's show in his capacity as entertainment officer, was cheered by troops who thought he was Marshal Montgomery

Sent for by high authorities, Lieutenant James underwent special training for his unique role. Studying Marshal Montgomery's voice, gesture, walk, distinctive salute, and even had a false finger fitted to his saluting hand to replace one he had lost in World War I.
