SPOTS OF SPORTS

By FRANK MANN HARRIS
("A Six Bit Critic")

When the New York Rangers recently absorbed an unmerciful ten-to-one trimming in Boston, they were promptly told to go and relax, and not think about hockey till their next game. The result was that they came back in first-class winning form. Had a similar classtrophe overtaken the Toronto Maple Leafs, they would probably have been on the ice the very day, filled with a sense of guilt and going through a strenuous workout. This illustrates, as well as anything we know, two widely divergent schools of thought in the matter of training and conditioning.

* * *

We recall watching, one fine May afternoon, a most highly-regarded King's Plate favorite falter in the stretch and wind up second. An old-timer, standing alongside, disgustedly remarked, "Another one that spilled his winning effort out there in the early mornings."

And you have all probably heard of the baseball pitcher who—when kidded about a rather poor season—replied, "Heck, the manager made me pitch twenty winning games out in the bull-pen." In other words, too much conditioning, too much stress on the necessity of putting everything you have into every move, can be every bit as dangerous as too little.

* * *

Should the Maple Leafs fail to come through in the fast-approaching playoffs—a horrifying prospect to all right-thinking citizens, of course, but still one within the bounds of possibility—we do not figure it will be through any lack of trying strenuously enough. The big pitfall in their path toward glory will be, it seems to us, trying a whole lot too hard.

No players in hockey, or any other line of sport for that matter, have had the sense of their own great responsibilities so constantly jammed down their throats. Temperance advocates proudly point them out as models of how every young man ought to act. They are pictured graciously granting countless requests for autographs after the maner of Hollywood glamour-boys. Tons of slush pouring from the printing presses, and over the air, help to give them the idea that the whole world is watching their every move, and that their winning or losing of a single game is a matter fraught with all the importance of, say, the newest developments of atomic power.

* * *

All of which tends toward a tenseness—a tightening-up—that is not good for any athlete. Babe Ruth was a great natural hitter, and especially dangerous in the pinch; but he was always as loose as ashes at the plate. The most noticeable thing about the finest golfers we have ever watched was the relaxed manner in which they went about their business. After all, most of the Maple Leafs are hardly more than kids. Maybe it mightn't be a bad idea, come playoff time, if somebody would sort of whisper in their ears, "Get in there and give all you've got; but even if you don't happen to win, the sun will probably rise tomorrow morning at about the usual hour."

About the most amusing thing that has come to light in a long time in the realm of sport is the discovery, by the high and mighty Jockey Club, that there is nothing in their book of rules dealing with the matter of bribery, or providing any penalty for a jockey who fails to report any attempt to tamper with his integrity. For if there is any sport you would think was amply festooned with rules and regulations, it is horse-racing, where the failure of a rider to salute properly before dismounting can call down the wrath of the mighty on his head.

* * *

But nothing at all about bribery! And this in a game where fortunes can be won just through the failure of some jockey to get the last ounce of effort from his mount—something which can be accomplished in dozens of ways too subtle for even the most experienced eye to more than suspect. We remember once watching a jockey put up a most rousing effort, whip flying in a highly convincing manner, but just failing to get up at the finish. "Well, that boy certainly gave his mount plenty of punishment," we remarked to a friend. "If he'd punished the horse half as hard as he did his own boot-leg" was the reply, "maybe we would have been cashing these tickets instead of tearing them up."

ISSUE 10—1947

"Woodpecker"

Over 26,000 tons of timber for use in building and as pit props were felled in German forests between November, 1946, and February, 1947, for delivery to Britain, it was officially announced.

Between 2,000 and 3,000 British soldiers are engaged in felling and loading the timber under "Operation Woodpecker."

Potash Found Northwest of Saskatoon

Discovery in Southern Saskatchewan of the first Canadian source of potash is considered the Dominion's most important mineral find in 20 years, Resources Minister J. L. Phelps, said last week.

Commercial production of potash found in the Unity oil field about 100 miles northwest of Saskatoon, would "revolutionize" agriculture in Canada which imported about $4,000,000 worth annually at an average cost of $40 a ton.

If present indications of the value of the deposits were substantiated $4,000,000 would have to be spent for a mill and shafts before the field could be put into production.

The discovery is of national importance since there is no other known source in Canada, Mr. Phelps said.
