BLEEDING THE COUNTRY OF ITS WEALTH

Economists and social workers are beginning to spot-light a rural problem which governments should no longer ignore, namely, the flight of rural wealth to urban centres.

For a century now young farmers and the purchasers of rural property have been paying off heirs and land owners who usually live in the city. Over and over again, one generation after another, this leaching goes on and the effect of it is apparent in dilapidated buildings, worn-out fences weedy farms and exhausted soils.

The money which pays for farms comes out of the land itself, and it has been coming out of the soils of Eastern Canada for a hundred years. It has been coming out of the soil and going into city banks, into city homes and into city industries.

It is under great difficulty that a young farmer can now purchase land and operate the farm. There is no accumulation of rural wealth to keep the industry stable and vital. It has become an economic and social problem of major importance, affecting not only the Canadian countryside, but manifesting itself likewise in congestetd urban centres and a serious housing shortage.

This trend is by no means peculiar to Canada. The flight of wealth and capital to urban centres has been a world-wide movement. In Sweden, consideration is being given to the sharing of land owned by absentees amongst the people who remain in the country. All countries will eventually have to deal with this problem and Canada should not be the last.—Farmer's Advocate.

"Did you go to the doctor the other day, John?"
"Yes, I did."
"And did he find what you had?"
"Very nearly."
"What do mean—very nearly?"
"Well, I had $10 and he charged me $8."

Hello Homemakers! The garden season brings us fruits and vegetables in glorious array. This year, with the accent on "save and send' to stay the march of death in less fortunate lands, we must make fullest use of our perishable foods . . . use them as they come, to conserve other foodstuffs in order to increase our exports, and preserve the garden crops for use during the rest of the year.

Methods of preservation should be sound and sure. Canning, the most widely used method, is too big a subjects for our column to handle in detail By all means send at once for a dependable guide. Write direct to Department of Agriculture, Parliament Bldgs., Toronto, for "Canning Step by step" (or ask your agricultural representitive for a copy). The Home Canning booklet may be obtained free from Consumer Section, Dom Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa. The pressure canning manufactuers also supply guide books for the large utensils. All instructions must be followed evactly to assure best results.

PRESSURE CANNING

When using a pressure cooker, prepare vegetables as for hot water bath and oven method and place rack in bottom of cooker. Add hot water to level of rack (about one inch), and place filled jars in the cooker, allowing space between jars for circulation. Adjust and tighten cover of cooker. Petcock should be left open until steam escapes for 7 min., then closeed. Start counting processing time when required pressure is indicated When processing time is up, remove cooker from heat! LET INDICATOR RETURN TO ZERO. Open petcock gradually, remove jars. Before processing next load, fill cooker with water to rack level.

		Lb.
Asparagus	30 min.	10 lbs.
Snap Beans	35 min.	10 lbs.
Beets	25 min.	10 lbs.
Peas	45 min.	10 lbs.
Spinach	55 min.	10 lbs.
Corn	65 min.	15 lbs.
Pumpkin	60 min.	10 lbs.

The above is a table for pint jars; allow 5 mins. for quarts.

TAKE A TIP

Successful canning depends on certain rules.

1. Use the right method for your equipment and follow directions carefully.
2. Check the jars, rings and tops. They must be in perfect condition —and that goes for the fruit and vegetables, too.
3. Be scrupulously clean in washing jars and fruit.
4. Be cautious to note processing time.
5. After cooling, store the jars in a cool, dry place, away from light.

THE SUGGESTION BOX

Mrs. S. M. says: When canning vegetables, say, green beans, we often have only enough left to half fill the last jar. Try finishing that last jar with some other vegetable, sliced carrots, for instance. Any jar of mixed vegetables should be processed the length of time necessary for the produce requiring the longer processing period.

Mrs. D. T. says: If you have not a steamer for blanching, try this device. Place a piece of cheesecloth over a large kettle; put on the lid to hold it in place and tie a strong cord tightly around the rim. Pour enough water into kettle so that it barely comes to bottom of bag of cheesecloth. When water boils, drop in the food to be steamed.

Mrs. J. M. says: I discovered that the base of my pressure cooker extended beyond the heat element of my prized electric range. Fearing that the heat would cause the enamel that teh heat would cause the eanmel to scratch, I cut a protective ring of asbestos paper to fit around the element.

Mrs. C. C. says: To shell peas quickly, dip them in boiling water for one minute, then cool quickly in cold water and pod.
