AND WHO PAYS?

Who pays for the "Baby Bonus?" Who pays for old age pensions? Who would pay for subsidinzing housing? Public opinion in Canada is so strong in favor of measures of social security to give every Canadian a certain minimum standard of living that the subject should be dismissed as not worthy of argument.

What remains is to decide how this ideal can be reached.

The fact is that the total supply of goods in Canada is insufficient to give all the people of Canada the standard of living which we think should be the minimum. That is a very simple fact. It is proved by the fact that the very people who are calling for more social security payments are the same people who say that there is so much purchasing power in existence so that price control should be put back into effect.

That means that, by the methods which are being suggested to the extent to which we redistribute purchasing power by taking from those who have a surplus and giving to those who have less than they need, we shall drive prices upwards.

To the extent to which we do not drive prices upwards social security will have to be paid for by someone reducing his standard of living, so that someone else can raise his. To the extent to which we do drive prices upwards, we leave the situation where it was before, except for having ruined the purchasing power of everyone's savings.

The more that this question is studied, the more it will be realized that it is not to distribute more money, but to produce more goods which its people needed in order to maintain a proper standard of living, then the mere process of producing these goods would produce enough jobs and enough pay so that the people in general could provide themselves with a decent standard of living. As long as the supply of goods is less than is needed, to distribute more money for this purpose seems to be moving in the wrong direction. —Calgary Albertan.

Come and meet your old friends.

"I didn't see you in church on Sunday."

"I noticed that — when I took up the collection."

It was during prohibition. The railroad station was packed with a gay going-away throng. Over at one side of the waiting room stood a quiet little man, fidgeting about and attempting to hide himself from the crowd. A policeman noticed that the stranger had something in his coat pocket from which drops were falling in slow trickles. The officer, with a gleam in his eye, collared the gent, put a finger out under the drops, caught one and tasted it. Then he spoke to the man.

"Scotch?"

"Nope," replied the stranger, "An Airdale pup!"
