Drought Safeguards

Our particular section of Ontario so far, has been spared the drought conditions that have visited other parts of the province, as well as a large section of western Canada.

In commenting upon remedies that might lessen the severity of dry seasons, the Farmer's Advocate says that experiences in past years and observations during the present season all acclaim good husbandry as the safeguard against drought. Soils in good physical condition with a high organic content will produce a crop of worthwhile proportions when vegetation on burnt-out farms will wither and go back into the ground. After the drought of 1936 there was considerable sickness in cattle throughout several counties in Western Ontrio. It was diagnosed by competent veterinarians as a deficiency disease and it revealed how close our soils are to the borderline between plenty and scarcity with respect to vital elements essental to the well being of plants, animals, yes, and man himself.
