

Halton iparent is an easy way to search for parenting programs and services

Need help with toddler behaviour? Toilet training problems? Looking for a parent support group? Struggling to get your child to do homework?

Parents can now find help at Halton iparent. The new, easy-to-use, online information resource lists more than 130 Halton parenting programs and services. It can be found at www.ourkidsnetwork.ca/iparent.

Halton iparent listings are geared to strengthening parenting knowledge and skills. The services, programs, workshops and seminars listed range from courses for expectant parents to discussion groups for parents of teens. Although the programs are primarily geared to helping parents, there are also some listings for programs that children and youth can attend.

"Parents often struggle to find information about programs and other supports to help them, not only with challenging issues, but also with the questions that crop up every day. We're hoping that Halton iparent will make it easier and simpler for them to find and connect with the right programs and services," said Elena DiBattista, Our Kids Network director.

"This is phase one of building Halton iparent into a meaningful service for families. We will be surveying users online to gather their opinions and comments. In March of 2014, we'll look at this feedback and make the changes that families have asked for to improve their Halton iparent experience," says DiBattista.

Our Kids Network is a Halton-wide partnership of organizations serving children and youth.
