Is there a theatrical producer alive who ever spent eighteen months on one production? Hardly. Yet this is the amount of time and concentrated thought David W. Griffith devoted to the production of "Hearts of the World," which immediately was acclaimed his supreme triumph of direction. His background was the war front in France. His characters were humans in the midst of an awful tragedy, yet he intermingled in all the melee of gas attacks—flame waves — bombardments, and aeroplane fights—a wonderful love story that no heart can resist. Nobody knows how much it cost for D. W. Griffith to film his supreme triumph, "Hearts of the World," playing at the Armouries this Friday afternoon and evening and nobody seems to care. Mr. Griffith himself doesn't know. All he feels about it is that the greatest ambition of his life is realized, which is more to him than money.

The correct place to draw the line between pay advs. and free news items is sometimes difficult to determine by correspondents and others. Announcements of gatherings where a collection is taken on an admission fee charged, is in the advertising class and a fee of ten cents a line is charged for each insertion, while all PAST events are considered news, and a report of such goes free.

A NEW SUGGESTION.

Owen Sound, Ont., Feb. 15, 1919.

The Editor of the Markdale Standard, Markdale, Ontario:

Dear Sir,—I have heard many suggestions for the erection of some lasting monument to our soldier boys and I believe that a public building would not fill the bill. I think that some monument should be erected which would be purely monumental in its purpose and effect.

Perhaps no place in the Province of Ontario is better suited for the erection of something which will at once be recognized as a monument pure and simple.

We all know of Calton Hill in Edinboro, Scotland, where several shafts are erected in honor of the Scottish soldiers who fell at Waterloo.

Owen Sound has a site unique in the Province and that is the top of the rock ledge on the Garafraxa Road at what is known as Holmes Lime Kiln. This point is fourteen feet higher than the highest point in Markdale twenty-four miles south. A shaft along the line of the Eiffel Tower in Paris and two hundred feet or so high with a lighting system in the shape of a cross could be seen from every point in the County of Grey, from the north shore of Georgian Bay, from Lake Huron and from the County of Simcoe at the Collingwood Mountains. I suggest an iron monument built of iron, on the principal of the highest class of light-house, with a system of enclosed steps with a Cupola at the top properly wired for safety which would give a view unsurpassed in Canada.

Why intrude the question of utility in a matter of this kind. One might as well suggest, instead of giving a soldier a badge of honor to wear on his breast, he should be given an inscribed cup to drink out of. Would we wish to commemorate the deeds of our hero dead, let us do so in the prescribed way, by erecting a monument pure and simple.

Were a monument of the kind I suggest erected, it would be an outstanding feature of the landscape in the day time and at night its rays of light would tell the mariner all over the Georgian Bay and away on the waters of Lake Huron, as well as the residents of all parts of the distant county that here is one ever living evidence that we have not forgotten those who sacrificed their young lives that we should live.

I would like to hear what others have to say regarding this matter of commemorating the sacrifice of our soldier boys.

Yours truly,
H. G. Tucker.

In reference to above, whether it would be advisable to waive local ambitions and unite and erect a monument that would be a permanent honor and credit, or to have tokens scattered all over this county is the point. The former idea would appear to gather favor as the project is thought out.

MUSIC ADDS CHARMS TO 'HEARTS OF THE WORLD'

Griffith Flings to Tunes of Yesterday in Arranging Musical Accompaniments.

There is music and music, but take it from D. W. Griffith, master showman and wizard of films, that the simple tunes of yesterday are what the public take closest to its heart. Blase first nighters may sit dry-eyed through the most gripping drama, but when the orchestra croons an old melody that he heard at his mother's knee he is likely to make furtive use of his handkerchief.

"An old song will cling like a vine to one's memories of home and childhood," says Mr. Griffith, "and will tug at heart strings when all other devices of the dramatist fail. I worked on that theory in having "The Birth of a Nation" score pieced together with fragments of old tunes. The public liked it, and I have received thousands of inquiries from all over the world as to the titles of the different themes."

In "Hearts of the World," which came to the Academy of Music, January 6th, 7th and 8th, the same idea has been followed. Among the melodies is a dainty spring song, sort of melody listed in the song books of the sixties as "Sweetest Bunch of Lilacs." This accompanies the love story of "The Girl" and "The Boy" played by Lillian Gish and Ethelbert Harron. In contrast to the pathetic little air from "Mignon" "Knows Thou the Land?" is heard in the lighter scenes of parting and loneliness. Whenever the rollicking little disturber (Dorothy Gish) comes into the story, a gay, saucy theme accompanies her. "It's Delightful to be Married," sung by the late Anna Held nine years ago. But perhaps the most appealing touch of all is achieved in that time-hallowed nursery tune, "Peek-a-Boo" chosen for the littlest mother, Ben Alexander. The cumulative effect of these and other old favorites in the score of this new film epic from the greatest of living producers, is to cause one to wonder whether the camera or the musical embellishment has been the most valuable instrument in tinting the horrors of world war with the soft hues of romance.

We must have all display advertising in not later than 4 p.m. Monday.

When the Boys Arrive

What form will the presentation take? Many are giving special medals, others watches or signet rings. All strive to give something that will be lasting enough to be prized in the years to come.

One thing we know, if it's a "Stephenson" watch, a "Stephenson" ring, or a "Stephenson" medal, neither we, the donor nor the wearer, will ever have cause to be ashamed of it.
