Donations to CASHh...

A fun filled St. Patrick's Day Lunch held by the congregation of Georgetown Knox Presbyterian Church, raised $1,000 for the local Cancer Assistance Services. Here Rev. Steve Boose, Jean Murray and Naomi Brennan are seen handing over the cheque to Marilyn Inglis and Sheila Smith of CASHh.

Approximately $10,000 in proceeds from the Georgetown Runners' annual Egg Nog Jog held in Terra Cotta in early December was distributed to four local community organizations at a recent presentation ceremony. The largest beneficiary of the donations was Cancer Assistance Services Halton Hills, which received $6,700. Also getting a financial boost from the popular 10.8-km Egg Nog Jog race were the Georgetown Bread Basket food bank ($1,350), the Georgetown Hospital Foundation ($850) and the Tuesday Troopers, a program run by Community Living North Halton ($1,100). Started in 1983, the Egg Nog Jog draws runners from across the country and has been capped at 600 participants annually. In the past six years alone, it has raised $41,500 for local charities. Sheila Smith, executive director of Cancer Assistance Services Halton Hills, receives a cheque worth $6,700 from Jim Baidacoff of the Georgetown Runners.

Pete Hargrave presented a cheque in the amount of $10,349 to Sheila Smith at CASHh recently. The funds were raised at the Peteypalooza event which featured live bands and a raffle table at the Acton Legion on March 15th. This was the second annual event which has raised $20,349 to date for local cancer initiatives.
