I RESOLVE to schedule two checkups for my car in 2015
Regardless of how well you think you know your vehicle, a well-trained (and certified) technician can always spot things ahead of time that you might miss. Taking the time to schedule a checkup twice a year may seem obsessive, but preventative maintenance at the hands of a qualified professional is cheap insurance. Stay ahead of the game when it comes to knowing what kind of shape your car is in.

I RESOLVE to check on my car's tires and wheels in 2015
If your tires have worn unevenly or your wheels are unbalanced, vibration can cause excess stress on suspension components. Excess stress on certain car parts can mean extra trips to the mechanic and potentially hefty bills. And this WILL eventually happen if you continue to ignore such problems. Avoid this by checking to make sure the tread on your tires are wearing evenly – and taking your car in if it's not.

I RESOLVE to keep up with my car's fluid changes in 2015
This is VERY important. Checking your vehicle's fluids is paramount to its longevity. While some fluids like brake fluid, clutch fluid and coolant may not require attention as often as oil, they're just as important. Marking one day on your calendar each month to make sure all of your fluids are topped off. This is quick, easy and can save you some serious repair dollars down the line. And also remember to change those fluids when your service manual requires it, as well.

I RESOLVE to address my car's minor problems early 2015
This is perhaps the easiest responsibility to overlook, but the potential consequences of doing so can be catastrophic. It's easy to hear a strange noise in your vehicle and hope that it will go away. Unfortunately, this rarely happens. Don't put off minor maintenance or easy repair work. Doing so can lead to larger problems and larger repair bills in the end. Bite the bullet, fix what's wrong, and your car will last a lot longer. Resolve to make your car maintenance a priority in 2015 by staying ahead of unnecessary repairs and service. The minimal effort required to do this is worth every second.
