Big Tips Are Rare Standard Is Good

Big tips are rare but the general standard is good, according to Henri Lalonde, captain of Red Caps at Bonaventure Station of the Canadian National Railways, who is celebrating his fortieth year as a porter in the busy terminal. Henri likes the job and sticks to it because he believes that red caps perform a useful and necessary service. His observations include the statement that present day travellers carry lighter hand luggage but more of it than did those of two score years ago when he started in November, 1902. During the years Henri established many friendships including such personages as the late Sir Wilfred Laurier and William H. Taft, former president of the United States. The latter had a summer home at Murray Bay, below Quebec, and in his annual pilgrimages through Montreal always had Lalonde look after his personal belongings.
