WORLD MIGHT BE WORSE

Most people are pretty well agreed that these are pretty tough times, and this old world of ours a pretty hard, sunless spot on which to live.

Well, how would you like to live on one of the other planets? On the planet of Venus for instance.

We are told by Prof. Phillip Fox, of the Adler Planetarium, that a day on Venus is twenty earth days long, and the night is the same. How would that do?

If the sun came up at the regular time, how hot would it get in the summer before it set twenty days later?

How would you like to work one of those long days in the hay field or on the stack, and do it on three meals?

Or if it turned cold when the sun went down, how would you feel when you woke up in that twenty day off morning?

How would the women like to crowd twenty days baking and housework into one? There would not be very much time for gossip or bridge, would there?

How would you like one of those Venus school days, boys, or how many of you men would go to church on one of those kind of Sundays?

And the nights. How would you like to buy and stoke enough wood or coal to keep the house warm on one of those winter nights, and how would you like to carry out the ashes in the morning?

Or if the baby had the colic for one of those twenty day nights, how would you feel in the morning?

The field of conjecture is unlimited, but we think we have pointed out enough to convince the average person that this old world of ours is not such a bad place to live in after all. At least it might be worse—very much worse.

In fact we are very much inclined to the opinion of the old lady who said the world was all right. It was just the people in it.—Ex.
