BALLINAFAD

Mr. George Cook of London has been visiting with his sister, Miss Helen Cook, for the past two weeks.

The funeral of the late Ephraim Brindlehurst took place last Friday afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Foreman had charge of the service. The deceased had been in ill health for some time and gradually grew weaker, passing away Wednesday morning. He was a member of the United Church and was highly respected in the community. We all join in extending our sympathy to the bereaved family and relatives.

Miss Eva Carson of Toronto visited last week with Miss Phyllis Foreman.

Richard Shotrill Jr. is recovering from a severe attack of tonsilitis.

The June meeting of the W.M.S. was held Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. R. McEnery. The meeting was well attended, visitors being present from Acton and Melville auxiliaries. The opening devotional exercises were taken by Mrs. W. McEnery and Mrs. A. Kentner. The scripture study was interestingly interpreted by Mrs. Foreman. Mrs. Chas. Deathead, the delegate Halpers Secretary of the Halton Presbyterial, was present as guest speaker and her address was very much enjoyed. Alma McEnery then contributed a solo in her usual capable manner. The meeting closed with singing and prayer, after which refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed by all.

The Young Men's Bible Class of the United Church held a supper Friday evening in the church hall. Mr. Bert Sinclair being in charge of affairs. They had as guest speaker, Mr. Whitelock of Milton, the Agricultural Representative for Halton.

OLDEST RESIDENT OF MILTON MRS. E. STOREY DIES

Mrs. Elizabeth Storey, 90, Milton's oldest resident, passed away at her home in Milton on Sunday. Her death removes the oldest living pioneer of the historic "Scotch Block" in Esquesing township, where her grandfather, John Stewart, who came from Perth City, Scotland, settled in 1817. Her father, Duncan Stewart, obtained 200 acres of land from the crown in April, 1834, and an additional 100 acres, May, 1837. Mrs. Storey possessed deeds for the land, which were signed and sealed by King William IV.

Mrs. Storey's family were in close contact with the rebel leader, William Lyon Mackenzie, who on several occasions spent the night at her father's house. One of the Stewart's most cherished possessions was a note for £100 given to Mrs. Storey's uncle, Alexander Stewart. Mackenzie borrowed the money from Stewart to replace his printing presses which were destroyed and thrown into Toronto harbor by young men in 1836. Another uncle, John Stewart, was captured in Montgomery's tavern on Yonge St., in December, 1837.

"You're quite right, grandpa, about the 'Music Goes Round' thing. But 'Ta-ra-ra-ra-boom-de-ay' was no intellectual treat."

CORRESPONDENCE

The Carlton, London.

Whitsun Day at Westminster Abbey—I was a little late and there was a larger congregation than usual and I did not get a very good position. It was sufficient for me that I was there. I knew what was being done and got a general idea of what was being said. After the service I wandered down through the nave into the war memorial chapel near the western door. At the extreme end quite high up are three memorial busts, the first Charles Kingsley, the well-known apostle of muscular christianity during the middle nineteenth century. I asked a gentleman if he could decipher the name on the second, and he said Mathew Arnold, and then pointing to a magnificent crimson wreath at my feet said the one word "Allenby." We were standing at the grave of the great soldier. And then my informant began to tell me of his knowledge of the funeral in a much broken voice. He had served under him for four years. Do you see how one is constantly being thrilled here by simple episodes that puts one in touch with great empire events?

At this service of last Friday the statues of Gladstone and Disraeli, I wonder some one did not think it suitable to place these statues together. I do not presume to plumb the thoughts of the inscrutable Disraeli, but I am quite sure Gladstone loathed his great opponent. And going inside when I saw King Edward VII. on horseback it did not seem to me to be appropriate, although it makes a very fine statue. But King Edward VII. was very much the inside man and a courtier.

Evensong at 3.15 at St. Paul's and at 6.15 it was my great privilege to be present at my first Confirmation in England, held by the Lord Bishop of Kensington at St. James Church, Piccadilly.

Whitmonday is a bank holiday in England and London is given over to visitors. Since my last visit Henry VII Chapel has been cleaned and restored. In it are interred King Henry VII and Elizabeth of York, and also contains the tomb of James 1st, 1625. Oliver Cromwell was buried near this but his body was removed at the Restoration. Looking at the tomb of Dean Stanley and Lady Agnita Stanley I recalled an incident at a local Deanery meeting, where someone said that in England Deans wives were called "my lady," instancing the Dean and Lady Agnita. The fact was of course, that the Deans wife was born Lady Agnita, as a peer's daughter.

In this chapel are the stalls and insignia of Knights of British orders. Also the tomb of Henry V, the hero of Agincourt, and the Shrine of Edward the Confessor. Near here also is the famous coronation chair which will be used next year at the coronation of King Edward VIII. Then the tomb of Richard 2nd and Anne of Bohemia, Princess Margaret of York 1472. The effigy on the tomb of Edward III is said to be a portrait.

Lord Beaconsfield is not buried in the Abbey but at Hughenden with his wife. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone are buried here. Viscount Castlereagh afterwards Lord Londonderry, chief factor in bringing about the union of Ireland with England, and which afterwards caused so much trouble is also buried here and has a very eulogistic memorial. Of Lord Oxford and Asquith a memorial tablet only. There are very elaborate monuments and tombs for Pitt and Wolfe. Tomb of Richard Harawenden Abbot 1420 - 1440. I like to bring this in as it shows the continuity of the church. A very large figure sealed in commemoration of James Watt. Of the more modern memorials there is a magnificent marble tomb of Lord Salisbury with a portrait recumbent figure in bronze. In poets corner their name is legion—Dryden, Browning, Spencer, Butler, Ben Jonson, Shakespeare, Dickens, Macaulay, Kipling, Hardy, Thackery. A plain slab in the floor of the nave always impresses me very much, for here lies David Livingstone. And there near the western door the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. There is invariably a number of reverent visitors here and always flowers.

The parks are a constant delight and I spent much time in Green Park as it was in easy walking distance from the Carlton. I had to pass Wellington's statue in Waterloo place and those of Lord Herbert of Lea and Florence Nightingale, the Lady with the Lamp, and the Crimean monument. Looking at the statue of Lord Clive sometime Governor of India, it is rather startling to read that he was not fifty years old when he died. There are I suppose thousands of monuments in London, yet when anyone says "the monument" everybody knows that it is the one that marks the place where the great fire stopped that is meant. And I always go—not to see it—but to read the notice on it—women are warned that if they beat their carpets against it they will be prosecuted? A few yards away from the monument is old London Bridge and I stood on it for some time gazing on the busy river simply alive with shipping. The railing was lined with men watching the unloading of a big freighter immediately below, and in the distance could be seen the Tower Bridge and the Tower of London, and somewhere about there is the famous Pool of London. It was John Burns, one of the first and best known of the labor members of parliament who said the Thames was liquid history, and I am always thrilled through whenever I look at it. It never looks the same, as the traffic upon it is governed by the tide. It is pretty dirty looking at low tide, but there is a swelling pride in it at high tide. Only a short distance up from London Bridge is Black Friars Bridge which I have crossed many times to go to Southwark Cathedral which was Shakespeare's parish church, and has a recumbent figure memorial to him. There is also in this church a memorial chapel to John Harvard, founder of Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., U.S.A. And then Waterloo Bridge which they are tearing down and but of the familiar bridges, Westminster Bridge, from which is a magnificent view of the Abbey, the House of Parliament, and across the river, buildings of the London County Council and St. Thomas Hospital. On the first pier of Westminster Bridge is a large monument of Queen Boadicea, Queen of the Iceni in a chariot. And then below is the ever changing river and between here and Waterloo Bridge the finest part of the Thames embankment with its beautiful well laid out gardens and Cleopatras needle right on the river. But I have wandered away from the parks. I do not know where one begins and the other ends, but I know you can easily walk from one to the other. Green Park just across from the parliament buildings and backing upon Whitehall and the guards parade grounds. On one of my walks from this park, I passed the famous No. 10 Downing Street, official residence of the prime minister. It is very quiet—in fact the more important any place is in England the more unassuming it appears. Going on through Green Park with its flowers and artificial lake with all kinds of water fowl you come to St. James Park, backing upon St. James Palace, and then I think you pass Buckingham Palace and up Constitution Hill to Hyde Park and Rotten Row, the fashionable riding strip and a favorite resort of the late King. Further on is Kensington Park and gardens with extensive playing fields, a great resort of children. On the banks of the Serpentine is Barrie's famous statue of Peter Pan. You know the story—Barrie watched the children sailing their boat in the Serpentine and conceived the idea of presenting them with a bronze statue of Peter and Wendy, the rabbit, mice and all the details from Peter Pan. He also arranged to have it placed in position between sunset and sunrise. When the children left there was nothing there, and when they returned next morning there was Peter with his pipe and all the imagery beneath him. Here too is Kensington Palace, the birth place of Queen Victoria and also the very elaborate Albert memorial, erected to the memory of the Prince Consort. Across the street is the Albert Hall also named for the Prince.

Joseph Beaumont.

FOUR-FOOTED VETERAN GUEST AT BATTALION RE-UNION

When members of the 164th Battalion gather at Georgetown this Wednesday for their reunion, among those present as a guest of honor will be a more-than-25-year-old horse that saw service in France for several years with the 3rd Battalion, going through many engagements of note, among them that of Vimy, where slight injuries caused him to be out of service for just two days, believed to be a record for any horse in active service overseas. This old war horse, Bildad, now lives a life of ease on Barrington Farm, Georgetown. He is owned by Colonel D. H. C. Mason, who secured him as a remount early in '16, and had him until February, 1919, and when the horse was returned to Canada his former officer secured him, and ever since Bildad has been the family pet. According to Colonel Mason, the horse was the first Canadian equine to reach the Rhine, and had a reputation for tagacity among transport officers, who have been quoted as saying that the horse had "more brains than any man in the regiment," and his owner says he still has them. So the old horse, still as sound as ever, albeit he has put on some weight since returning from overseas, pots in the days, used occasionally as a saddle horse, but for the most part taking the well-earned rest that his overseas service deserves. The old veteran appeared in two poses in the Toronto Globe on Monday, the photograph showing him with his officer and owner, Colonel D. H. C. Mason, and with the latter's 8-year-old daughter Betty; also a profile of Bildad, as he looked around for another tidbit in the shape of an apple, something he especially likes.
