Cobwebs never hang in the stores that advertise in this paper.

There are not many things more difficult to handle than first-class credit.

You should not abuse deceitful people too fiercely. Remember that you are one of that number yourself. Everybody is more or less deceitful.

What J. J. Mitchell, president of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, said of Mr. Armour, who was his lifetime friend, is also true of Professor Gray, that is: "Courage and energy made him irresistable." This was the keynote to his wonderful inventions.

Michigan is flooded with counterfeit nickels, which probably cause great activity on the part of the slot machines. They ought to follow the Highwood example and do away with the slot machines and save these nickels for the contribution box.

Prof. Sparks' Lecture.

Prof. Edwin E. Sparks, of the Chicago University, gave the second of his series of six lectures before the study class of the Highland Park Woman's Club on Tuesday evening at the Baptist church.

It is not often that the opportunity is afforded us of listening to a lecturer of Prof. Sparks' ability, and his audience evidenced their appreciation of his conscientious work by their close and respectful attention to his every sentence. He lectures in an easy, natural manner, leading his audience by slow degrees through the many avenues and causes which led up to and resulted in the revolutionary war. It is delightful to be brought face to face, as it were, with the men who were the originators of our present government.

History tells us of the finished result of the life work of great men, but the obstacles which they were obliged to overcome, and the noble purposes which upheld and aided them in their undertakings are not always fully understood. Hence the inestimable value of information gathered from such thorough research and study, delivered in so clear and concise a manner. Prof. Sparks' lectures show a complete scholarly command of his subject and a resource and reserve force far above the average historian.

Not the least among the many delightful features of Prof. Sparks' lectures is the utter absence of any effort on his part to astonish or mystify his audience by the use of unusual words or complicated sentences, every statement showing the scholar who employes language to express ideas, and in no instance for personal aggrandisement, making his lectures of unusual value to the young student.

The topic last Tuesday was "Samuel Adams; the Revolutionary Machinery in Motion," and for the next lecture, February 5, will be "John Adams, the Promotor of Independence." LIGHT.
