Poetry.

A Maiden's Smile.

Thou art a girl of noble nature's crowning,
A smile of time is like an ear of grain;
Thou hast no lustrous locks, no pearly frowning,
Like daily beauties of a vulgar race;
When thou dost smile a light is on thy face,
A clear cool kindness, a lunar beam
Of gentle radiance, silvering o'er the stream
Of human thought, with beauteous glory,
Not quite a waking truth, nor quite a dream.
A visitation—bright tho' transitory.

Anecdote of Girard.

Stephen Girard was one of the best friends of the working classes that ever lived. He admired industry as much as he detested sloth—and there has never been known an instance where he did not furnish employment or money to an industrious man in distress.

Early one morning while Mr. G. was walking around the square, where the mechanics' houses now stand, John Smith who had worked on his buildings in the humble capacity of hod-carrier, and whom Mr. G. had noted for his unusual activity, applied to him for assistance, when something like the following dialogue took place:

"Assistance! work, ha! You want to work?"

"Yes, sir, it's a long time since I've had anything to do."

"Very well; I shall give you some. You se dem stones yondare?"

"Yes sir."

"And when you are done, come to me at my bank."

Smith diligently performed his task, which he accomplished about one o'clock, when he repaired to Mr. G. and informed him that it was finished, at the same time asking if he could not give him some more work.

"Ah, ah! out? You want more work? Very well; you shall go place dem stones where you got 'em. Understand. You take him back."

"Yes sir."

Away went Smith to his work, which having got through with about sunset, he waited on Mr. G. for his pay.

"Ah, ah! you all finished?"

"Yes sir."

"Very well. How much money shall I give you?"

"One dollar, sir."

"Dat is honest. You take no advantage—dere is your dollar. Can I do anything else for you?"

"Out. Come here when you get up to-morrow. You shall have some more work."

Next morning, on calling, Smith was not a little astonished when told that he must "take dem stones back again," nor was his astonishment diminished, when the order was repeated for the fourth and last time. However, he was one of those happy kind of persons who minded his own business, and he went on with his job with all the indifference imaginable. When he called on Mr. G in the evening and informed him that the stones "were as they were," he was salated thus in the most cordial manner:

"Ah, Monsieur Smith, you shall be my man; you mind your own business; you do what is told you; you ask no questions, you no interfere. You got one vife?"

"Yes sir."

"Ah, dat is bad! Von vife is bad. Any de little chicks?"

"Yes sir; five living."

"Five! dat is good; like five; I like you, Monsieur Smith; you like to work; you mind your business. Now I do something for your five little chicks.—There, take these five pieces of paper for your five little chicks; you shall work for them, you shall mind your business and your little chicks shall never want five more. Good bye."

The feelings of the grateful man being too much overcome to allow him to reply, he departed in silence; and by minding his own business, he is one of the wealthiest of the name in Philadelphia.

Humorous.

There is nothing like leather. Why? Because it is the sole support of man.

Why is a stick of candy like a race horse? Because the more you lick it the faster it goes.

A young lady who had lost or mislaid her beau, was advised to hang up her fiddle. She said the above advice gave great violence to her heart-strings.

"How do you do sare?" said a Frenchman, to an English acquaintance.

"Rather poorly, thank you," answered the other.

"Nay, my dear sare," said the Frenchman, "don't thank me for your illness—I cannot help it."

The usually complicated field orders in the two opposing armies in Virginia have recently undergone considerable modification. In the Union army they are simple:—

"Attention! double-quick, march!

With the rebels the orders are just as simple, and as easily understood. They are:—

"Attention! skedaddle, run."

A Scene.—Last week a funny scene occurred on the quay, just as the last boat was about putting off for the steamer. The cattle going south had all been shipped, but there remained one beastie in charge of a lad from the country, who did not seem to be at all in a hurry.

"Come on my lad," and 'shove off the boat,' were apparently lost on him, and the party who had charge of the shipment, assisted by one or two of the men about, laid hold of the beastie, and had it in a fling in a trice, the young man from the country holding on by the head, and resisting with all his might.

"Na, na," he cried, "let her go, I want something else before I part wi' the beastie; I maun hae the money first."

This explanation cleared up the case, and the discomfitted shipper soon appeared bareheaded, puffing along the quay with a bundle of notes in his hand, amid cries of "look alive will you," and "shove off the boat," &c. The canny lad having then relinquished his hold of the beastie, pocketed the notes with an air which said unmistakably,—

"I'm a young man from the country, but you don't come over me."—John O'Groat Journal.

Editing vs. Music.—A music teacher once wrote that 'the art of playing on a violin requires the nicest perception and the most sensibility of any art known in the world.' Upon which an editor comments in the following manner.—

'The art of publishing a country newspaper, and making it pay, and at the same time have it please everybody, beats the art of fiddling higher than a kite.'

Dip Him Again.—In Venango county Pennsylvania, is a queer fellow by the name of Tom Barton, who drinks and stutters and stutters and drinks. He has a brother Jim who is glib of tongue, and a great liar—we hope he has reformed, for he professed to have become a good man, and was baptised in the river. It was a bitter cold day in winter, and the ice had to be cut to make a place for the ceremony. As Jim came out of the water, Tom said to him:—

'Is it c-c-c-cold, Jim?'

'No,' replied Jim, 'not at all.'

'D-d-dip him in again, m-m-minister,' cried Tom, 'he l-l-lies yet.'

The Farmer's Daughter.

There's a world of buxom beauty flourishing in the shades of the country. Farm-houses are dangerous places. As you are thinking of only sheep or curds, you may be suddenly shot thro' by a pair of bright eyes, and melted away in bewitching smiles that you never dreamt of till the mischief is done. In towns, and in theatres, and in thronged assemblies of the rich and titled fair, you are on your guard, you know what you are exposed to, and put on your breastplate, and pass through the most deadly onslaught of beauty safe and sound. But in those sylvan retreats, dreaming of nightingales and hearing only the lowing of oxen, you are taken by surprise. Out stops a fair creature—crosses a glade—leaps a stile. You start, you stand lost in wonder astonished admiration. You take out your tablets to write a sonnet on the return of the Nymphs and Dryads to earth, when up comes John Tompkins and says, "Its only the farmer's daughter." What have farmer's such daughters now-a-days? Yes, I tell you they have such daughters, those farm houses are dangerous places. Let no man with a poetical imagination—which is only another name for a very tender heart—flatter himself with the calm delights of the country, with the serene idea of sitting with the farmer in his old fashioned chimney corner, and hearing him talk of corn and mutton—of joining in the pensive pleasures of the pipe and gossip of the farmer's wife; of the parson and his family, of his sermons and his pig, over a fragrant cup of young hyson, or wrapt in the delicious luxuries of custards or whipt creams. In walks a fairy vision of wondrous witchery, and with a courtsey and a smile of winning and mysterious magic, takes her seat opposite. It is the farmer's daughter, a lively creature of eighteen, fair as a lily, fresh as the May dew, rosy as the rose, graceful as the peacock perched on there by the window; sweet as a posy of violets and clover gillivers, modest as early morning, and amiable as your imagination of Desdemona or Gertrude of Wyoming. You are lost. It's all over with you. I wouldn't give an empty filbert or a frog bitten strawberry for your peace of mind if that glittering creature be not as pitiful as she is fair. And that comes of going into the country, out of the way of vanity and temptation, fancying farm houses nice old fashioned places of old fashioned contentment.

TO THE PUBLIC!

The Subscriber begs to intimate to his friends and the Public generally that he has made some material improvements in some parts of the machinery of the Milton Mills, whereby he hopes to give better satisfaction than ever. In the first place the Stones have been dressed according to the most approved method. In the next place, the bolting machinery is improved so that better and more flour is made from the same wheat. The cleaning apparatus is also improved so that there is considerable less waste than usual, and the grain perfectly cleaned.

As it sometimes happens that the very best grists have to be ground after inferior wheat, the person with the good grist gets some of the inferior also ground before. To obviate that difficulty, which is a hardship to the man with the good grist—the subscriber has instructed the miller to grind some of his own good wheat between the two. He is willing to bear the loss for the sake of giving satisfaction and gaining the custom of all. The subscriber begs further to say that he is determined to keep a miller that perfectly understands his business and one that will endeavor to give satisfaction to all.

Being well satisfied that there is no better Mill in the neighborhood, and perfectly sure that none can take more pains in grinding, he feels that he can with confidence invite the patronage of the public.

MILTON

FOUNDRY!

THE SUBSCRIBER HAVING LEASED this Foundry for the present year begs to announce to the Public that he is manufacturing largely the various IMPLEMENTS enumerated below.

HARVESTER!

COMBIN'D REAPER & MOWER,

of the most approved construction. Being almost entirely of IRON, very compact, simple and of great strength, it must be durable. The Guards can be removed with ease, being BOLTED to a Wrought Iron Finger Board. If any should break they can be replaced whilst the machine is in the field, in a few minutes. In ten minutes it can be changed from a Mower to a Reaper, and the Reel can be used for both operations.

ONE IMPORTANT FEATURE,

It has NO SIDE DRAUGHT, and the weight of both Driver and the Raker bears immediately over the driving wheel. It will pass with ease through any ordinary gate, and it has taken more prizes since it has been in operation than any other machine in the United States, and to be the first Prize at the County Show last Fall, in Milton, which was open for Combined Machines to the Province, and for which the St. George Machine competed, which took the First Prize at the Provincial Show. Several were in operation in the vicinity of Milton during the Harvest. References can be given with regard to the excellence of their operation.

SEPARATORS

AND

HORSE POWERS

The extraordinary success of of those Machines during the last season, needs no comment. They have been in operation in various parts of the County, and Thrashers are unqualified in their praise. They will Thrash more and clean better than any other machine in the Province. The SHOE is warranted not to choke, no matter how much grain is put through. Enquire of the Farmers in whose barns they have been, and of the thrashers who have purchased them.

has been

Still Further Improved, and is now a most efficient implement, easy of draught, and will cultivate to a depth of six inches.

THE BLADES

cross each other to such an extent, that it is impossible for thistles or other noxious weeds to escape being effectually cut up.

PLOUGHS

Every useful variety of

PLOUGH PATTERNS

always on hand, but our efforts have been more especially directed to the development of the celebrated

"MODELAND PLOUGH."

Our Iron Headed Metallic Standard Modeland Plough, stands confessedly unequalled by any other in the Province. We would call attention to the fact, that an Inferior Plough to this,
