satisfactory to put Gordon Bennett and Mr. Sewatd. After which a grand display of fireworks, and a transparency two miles long, bearing in flaming letters the legend,

"THE UNION IS NO MORE.'

"Put that in your pipes and smoke it; there's plenty more where that came from. Let's liquor all round."

The Captain's Address.

Being present at an open debate of the Omagh Division Sons of Temperance, the question for debate being: "which is the greatest nuisance to society, the thief or the drunkard." I think the concluding portion of the Captain's address, on the side of the drunkard. worthy of notice.

"In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, to portray the misery resulting from plans laid at the altar of Bacchus, and executed under the influence of alchohol, would require a sheet of canvass that would reach from where I now stand, to the most distant star, and sufficient breadth to span the poles. For tinsel, you may take ruined homes, midnight conflagrations, victims suspended by the neck to rafters, trees and bed-posts, the silent brook, the swift running stream, the broad rolling river and the trackless ocean, the polished steel, the moulded bullet, and poison of all grades. For tinge, take the tears that have flowed for centuries from virtuous eyes, the blood that has so often crimsoned its lovely mother earth.

"Transform every stalk of corn whose golden grains has been converted into alcohol, into an artist, and let them labor for a hundred years on this great sheet; and were your visionary powers so enlarged, Sir, that you could view the amount of labour performed, you would only have an index to the sorrow, misery, wretchedness, and woe poduced by alcohol.

"To be called a thief, Sir, is bad enough, but he is a gentleman, in comparison to a drunkard; because the latter is a thief, robber, perjurer, murderer, and suicide. Now, Sir, these are not assertions, but facts. Who will deny that he is a thief, who pledges the apparel of wife and children, without their knowledge, for alcohol? And is he not a robber who spends his earnings in the dram shop, while his family is suffering? Who will deny that he is a perjurer of the darkest dye, who before heavens high altar, swore that he would perform all the duties of a husband, to the best of his ability, now performing them at the altar of Bacchus, while the poor unfortunate and neglected partner, who relied with implicit confidence upon the master, once human, but now a demon, is left alone without a consoling friend. He is a murderer worse than Cain, who performs his work by inches, indifference, neglect, abuse, and want, and soon consign to the tomb the remains of her who, a few short years ago, had great hopes of the future. But alas! alcohol has blighted her hopes, and her body is consigned to an untimely grave. As for suicides, Great Britain and Ireland, the great Republic of America and Canada, furnishes one hundred and twenty-two thousand, who annually fill a drunkard's grave. You will not dispute that every man that fills a drunkard's grave is a suicide. Now, Sir, is it not awful to contemplate, more awful still to know, that one hundred and twenty two thousand of the best and noblest of our race (yea, it is the open and generous hearted, without an exception, that become the victims of intemperance) are lost to their country every year—and, sad to relate, lost for time and eternity. And their blood will be upon our heads, because we have not put forth a mighty effort to remove the temptation; but depend upon it, the day of retribution is not far distant; the prayer of the widow and orphan is not forgotten by him who has promised to be a father to the fatherless, and the widow's stay. He has answered the prayer of the despised sons of Africa, and he will answer theirs. Now, Sir, I have no doubt we all agree that Kingston is the fittest place for the thief, and I hope you will agree with me that the apothecary's shelf is the proper place for alcohol. Now, Sir, I have no doubt but you are satisfied by this time, that the drunkard is the greatest nuisance; and as we are soon to have the privilege of removing the evil by voting yea upon By-Law 42. If we believe in the divine records, let us be at our post and record our vote on the side of heaven, and not on the side of Bacchus, who is the devil's prime minister; bearing in mind that we cannot partake of the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils. Our creator holds us responsible for our examples as well as our creators, in withholding the cup of cold water from the inebriates; little ones that are now leaning upon the bosom of the Saviour, whose consoling promises sustain and cheer them. Through a miserable existence we are heaping evils of fire upon our heads against that day when the Judge will sit upon the judgment seat; when we who help to keep the monster alive, will be directed to the left, because we did not help to give a cup of cold water to one of those, the least of his."
