BOYS! Be well dressed by wearing our new square toed Oxfords.—R. M. Fasken.

TO HONOR MISS EMILY HOUSE.

The proposal to hold a reunion of ex-pupils of S. S. No. 10, Trafalgar township, in honor of their old teacher, Miss Emily House, now in her 93rd year, has been revived and promises to be carried out well early this summer.

J. H. Beamish, Islington, principal of Runnymede high school, York township, one of the old boys, told The Star that plans are being proceeded with and are meeting with much encouragement, with the hope that the venerable teacher will be the guest amid the familiar scenes at the Toronto Township and Trafalgar Township Union school, on the townline between Halton and Peel counties, where she taught for a long time.

Co-operating with Mr. Beamish are Councillor George S. Bonham, Toronto township; Dugald McGregor, Streetsville, and Thomas Sanderson, caretaker of Coleman Ave. school, Toronto. This quartet visited Miss House at her present home with her nephew, Alfred House, 851 Carlaw Ave., Toronto, and found her delighted with the prospect of the reunion. Although she has become somewhat feeble, she hopes she will be able to be there.

The parents of Miss House were pioneers of the Trafalgar district. It is her boast that she herself never went to school as a pupil. Her early knowledge was imported to her by her mother, who was a well-versed woman, educated in England. What Miss Emily learned in this fashion on the farm fitted her to pass the examination set by Superintendent of Education Egerton Ryerson, for her teacher's certificate. The examination she says was equal to that set for entrance pupils to day.

A trustee of S. S. No. 16, Sixteen Mile Creek, hearing that Miss House had secured a certificate, went to her and engaged her. Though only 16 years of age, she had a class of forty scholars, many of them grown men and women.

She taught at various schools in the neighborhood, Erindale, Lisgar, Hornby, McCurdy's Corners, Nelson, where in the old Presbyterian church of St. Paul's the family worshipped; Coyne's school, Snider's Corners.

Then she went farther afield and spent some time at Niagara. But no matter where she taught, her ability as an instructor, her forward reaching vision of a developing educational system, and her beautiful, courteous disposition, won parents and pupils. Friday afternoon concerts were instituted by her, she got up spelling matches for the neighborhood, gave Bible talks and long before Arbor day was dreamed of took her pupils to the woods for nature study.

She taught herself bookkeeping so that she might instruct the older scholars, and at all times strove to impart a love of good literature at a time when books and papers were scarce and hard to get.

Later she went to Manitoba where she taught for a year, then crossed to the States, teaching a year in North Dakota, seven in Oregon, and seventeen in California.

In 1915 she completed sixty years as a public school teacher. At every step of the way she studied, took up new courses passed examinations ever increasing in difficulty.

While teaching in the Trafalgar district she kept in touch with the farmstead and assisted in the various activities there. She has mowed with the scythe, bound behind the cradle, hauled lumber from the mill, and put a picket fence around the farm. One summer she dug a 20-foot well and built the stonework required to line it.—Toronto Daily Star.

Gathered In Nova Scotia and Carried Over to England.

A new and extensive use for eelgrass, the arch enemy of fishermen, and the preserver of winter warmth in countless farm houses along the Nova Scotia coast, is being exploited with great success, especially in London, England, according to reports from the capital city of the Empire.

This green and stringy seaweed, which grows in great profusion on the Nova Scotia shore, is being woven into mats and used as a silencer in many of the office buildings and public auditoriums being erected in England. This seaweed is being transported all the way across the Atlantic to make life more peaceful in the heart of London. Nova Scotia eelgrass is fireproof, non-verminous, and sound-absorbent, and grows to perfection only where it is washed by fresh and salt water, as is the case at river estuaries. If it is gathered from a sandy shore it is full of impurities, but on the Nova Scotia coast it has ideal conditions and a rocky shore. One firm alone imports 50,000 square feet of eel-grass mat each month. It is fixed to the flat spaces of ceilings or along walls; thin wood battens are then nailed over it, and upon this is stretched canvas, which may be treated to suit any desired desorative scheme.

Invents New Life Rocket.

A life-saving rocket apparatus which, it is claimed, will throw a rope line accurately at 325 yards, has been invented and patented by an English coastguard.

"With the old gun," said W. G. Knight, "it has never been possible to fire a rocket and throw a line accurately, but with my gun I can fire into the eye of the wind at any elevation and hit the mark."

The gun, three rockets, three sets of wires, and 325 yards of inch rope, weigh only 80 pounds.

HAS LONG AND INTERESTING HISTORY.

First Mention of Gloves Is In the "Odssey"—Sign of Civilization—Gloves for Stolen Kisses — The Poisoned Glove.

In common with all our old-fashioned handicrafts, the glove trade is under greater indebtedness to the church than, possibly, many glovers would credit, writes D. A. Oswald, in the Glasgow Weekly Herald. Muscular Christianity is no new doctrine. In or about the year 790 Charlemange granted an unlimited right to the abbot and monks of Sythia for making their gloves and girdles and covers for their books of the skin of the deer they killed, thus affording another proof of the use of gloves in those early times.

Gloves had, however, more than this connection with the church, for they were given distinctive employment in its rites and services. Gloves for bishops are still an institution, and are included in the lists of clerical necessaries.

A careful search by experts has disclosed the fact that the first mention of gloves is in the "Odssey," in which it is stated that the father of Ulysses wore them on his hunting expeditions to protect his hands from the thorns; and, in his "Cyropaedia," Xenophone reproaches the Persians for their effeminacy in covering their hands. Both in the East and West, the glove, when once adopted, soon became of importance as the recognized symbol of the transfer of property, the seller of land giving the purchaser a glove as a token of possession.

A good deal might be written about the tastes in gloves evidenced by historical personages. Henry II. wore highly-ornamented gloves; those of his son John were white, and adorned—one with a sapphire and the other with a ruby. Ann Boleyn is credited with being excessively fastidious about her gloves, which she wore as much as possible to conceal a deformity in one of her fingers.

Her famous daughter, Elizabeth, was no less particular, but in her case she often pulled off her gloves to display the white hands of which she was so proud. In the accounts of her unhappy predecessor is an item of a gratuity to a gentleman for bringing her "from a duchess in Spain" a box with 12 pairs of Spanish gloves made doubtless of the costliest leather, perfumed and ornamented with silk, gold, silver, and gems. Even in those days the Spanish gloves, possibly an industry acquired from the Moors, had a high reputation.

Gloves adorned with rubies and sapphires and perfumed gloves from Spain were part of the outfits of the wealthy people of an earlier part of our history, and stories of the conveyance of poison through richly-ornamented gifts of this sort brought with them the ill-omened phrase of the "poisoned glove."

Naturally the poet took an early opportunity of making a prettier use of the article of apparel, and

"Oh, that I were a glove upon that hand,
That I might touch that cheek!"

was only one of the many conceits of a similar kind.

Another form of symbolism has passed into our proverbs with Cowper's "As if the world and they were hand in glove." Again, we have the phrases about "kid glove diplomacy" and "kid glove methods," which may be set against that "mailed fist," of which we heard so much at the beginning of this century.

As is well known, the throwing down of a glove was in feudal times a challenge to a single combat, and the picking up of that glove an acceptance of the defiance—a fact skilfully turned to account by Browning in his beautiful poem, "The Glove," in which he makes the heroine dash down her glove at the feet of the lion, only to have it flung back in her face by her lover.

In the times of chivalrous romance, knights used to wear a lady's glove in their helmets as a token that they would defend her cause against all comers, and to this day a special significance attaches to the gift of a pair of gloves from a man to a woman. The custom of taking off the right hand glove before shaking hands with a lady is probably a survival of the days of chivalry.

There is also the familiar practice of the presentation of a pair of white gloves to judges and magistrates when there are no cases to be tried in the courts.

Certainly the most popular of glove customs is that which prescribes that if any man or maiden, discovering one of the other sex asleep, is able to steal a kiss, he or she is entitled to claim a pair of gloves from the one caught napping. How this custom came into existence nobody seems to know. To paraphrase Sir Lucius O'Trigger, "It is a very pretty custom as it stands, and we should only spoil it trying to explain."

Here it may be recalled that the "Fair Maid of Perth" won a pair of gloves from Henry Smith in this manner, and that her father thus explained to him his obligation — "Thou knowest the maiden who ventures to kiss a sleeping man wins of him a pair of gloves."

Need it be added that gloves, apart from their ceremonial uses, have always been regarded as a "sign of civilization" and good breeding; and, even if they were to be completely discarded to-morrow, they would, because of the symbolism connected with them, always retain an interest for students of the past.

Engine Half Block Long.

Designed especially to burn a grade of coal of comparatively low heating value, a huge engine constructed for the Northern Pacific Railway is 125 feet long, weighs more than 1,000,000 pounds and has 34 wheels, including the 12 on the tender, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. An interesting feature is the mechanical stoker which will crush, deliver and distribute about the huge fire box more than 22 tons of coal an hour. It is expected that the locomotive will be able to haul in one train cars that are now made up into two.

Soviet Finds New Waters.

Mineral waters, said by Soviet experts to be stronger than those at the famous Karlsbad baths in Germany, have recently been discovered at Kelbedjar in the Caucasus.

The place is almost inaccessible and a huge investment for roads and for accommodations at the springs themselves will have to be made before the discovery can be turned to practical uses.

Colors of the Oceans.

The gulf stream has the bluest ocean water, whereas the Arctic ocean is the greenest.

Iron pavements have been tested in France and pronounced cheap and durable.

TO ELECTRIFY RAILWAYS.

Spanish Government Planning Big Improvements.

Although the vast schemes of the Spanish Government for the electrification of the railways have not reached the stage when actual work can begin, the minister of Fomento states that the commission examining the technical details has approved the plans covering 2,200 kilometers of narrow and broad gauge lines and the conditions for tendering are almost ready.

In the opinion of the commission the following lines are those which should be electrified in the first place: Madrid-Avila, Madrid-Segovia-Medina, Valencia-Cuenca, the Catalonia network of railways, Miranda-Bilboa and one or two minor lines.

It is calculated that from 150,000 to 200,000 horsepower will be required to drive the lines to be electrified and that the power already available from Spanish stations is more than ample for this purpose.

Canada's Potato Crop.

The total potato crop in Canada in 1928 is estimated at 54,525,000 hundredweight in a report issued by the Department of Agriculture. This is a big increase over 1927, when the total was 46,458,000 hundredweight. The 1928 crop is the largest crop harvested since 1924, when the total was 56,648,000 hundredweight.

To Learn Canadian Farming

AN admiral's son and one of the "Young Ambassadors of the Empire", the latter having visited Canada last year with the British "Young Ambassadors" Party were amongst recent arrivals, at Halifax, of juvenile Britons coming to Canada for farm work.

The admiral's son was Edward G. B. Kiddle (right), son of Admiral Sir Charles Kiddle, R.N., and the "Young Ambassador" was Frederick T. Mace, (left), who completed a correspondence course in Canadian farming and who has proceeded to Winnipeg for placement.

The boys were among a party of 125 arriving on the Cunarder "Ascania" and who travelled westward over the lines of the Canadian National Railways. Their placements were handled under the auspices of the British Immigration and Colonization Association.
