WALTZING MICE

Japan Has Many Kinds of Strange Small Pets—Crickets, Fireflies, Grasshoppers, Beetles, Etc.

Few strange pets are more interesting and amusing than the "waltzing" mice of Japan, as they are called. Their activity and diversions are amazing, says P. B. Prior in Humane Pleader.

The dancing mouse is a quaint-looking animal. Many specimens are black-and-white, while in all the eyes are pink. Just about the time when the ordinary house-mouse is beginning to creep out of the home nest and walk about, its curious little Japanese cousin commences to dance; and dance it does, more or less, from morn till night, during its hours awake. It is said never to tire. But this is not correct. I once had a pair of dancing mice brought straight from Yedo, and sometimes one of them became so tired that it staggered about and fell as it danced. Then, after a rest for a few minutes, up it would jump and begin dancing merrily again with its partner.

When several waltzing mice are put into a cage or mouse-house, each, as a rule, instinctively seeks a partner for a dance. Sometimes these couples waltz by themselves, and sometimes more than two will join in the mad jing-a-ring or whirling dance. Round and round they hurl themselves, so smartly that it is hard to tell which is the head or the tail of the mouse on which your eyes are fixed. Then they slow down suddenly, as if a master of the ceremonies had given the signal for the change. Soon the entire party will as suddenly resume the mad whirl. Often one has had to put their house in darkness by throwing a "curtain" over it, lest they dance themselves to death.

When the floor of the cage is not smooth, it has been stated, the mice actually wear out their little paws in dancing. But in the mouse-house in which I kept my Japanese waltzers the floor was made of nicely polished wood that was cleaned every morning before I opened the slide or small door of the compartment, in which the mice rested at night.

In the day compartment of the cage there should be an upright, says, a long nail or peg, which forms for the mice a pivot, round which they may waltz. Without such a guide, the little creatures certainly dance, but slowly and irregularly. With an upright for a guide, they rapidly spin round, sometimes narrowing the circle until it is no larger than the mouth of a large tumbler.

There are days when the waltzing instinct seems to be dormant, for they creep around their compartments, alert enough but listless as regards dancing.

There are days when the waltzing instinct seems to be domant, for they creep around their compartments, alert enough but listless as regards dancing.

As soon as the floor of my pets' cage was clean again, and the food set out, I would open the slide, and in a flash the waltzers darted down the gangway and onto the waltzing floor. Sometimes they would breakfast before commencing their gyrations, and sometimes they began right away, breaking out into a sudden wild whirl, which they would keep up for a minute or two, then as suddenly stop and make for their food.

In Japan there are many kinds of strange small pets which we would never think of bothering about. Pet crickets and pet fireflies, pet grasshoppers, beetles and toads are trained by the natives to do wonderful things. But the queerest wonder of all is the waltzing mice.

THIEF CATCHING DEVICE.

Police Use Potent Powder In Order to Catch Pilferer.

London police are using a very efficient, but simple means of catching pilferers. Money had been missed repeatedly from a cupboard at a girls' school. Finally, says a Tit-Bits article, the police were called in. The police officer sprinkled over the paper money left in the cupboard some of his potent powder, almost invisible under ordinary conditions, but capable of turning blue and virtually indelible whenever touched by anything moist.

The porter, who had possessed himself improperly of keys to the money cupboard, proceeded to help himself to some of the powder-sprinkled money as he had taken other money before. Upon the new theft being discovered the investigators demanded that the porter show his hands, when the tell-tale marks were found printed indelibly on the skin of his hands and fingers, having been brought out by the perspiration.

THE CITY OF LONDON.

Best Policed and Best Lighted Area In the World.

The one mile square section which is the actual City of London is probably the best policed and best lighted area in the world.

The total light of the city's street lamps aggregates 1,260,000 candle-power, and this is almost equally divided between gas an electricity. Its main thoroughfares, such as Cheapside and Queen Victoria street, are illuminated by electric lamps of 3,000 candle-power each, fitted with dioptric lenses, and high-pressure gas lamps, of 2,000 candle-power. But even the city's lamps, if concentrated in one great light, would be feeble compared with the great light of the aerial lighthouse recently erected 2,000 feet above sea level on Mont Afrique, France, which has a candle-power of 1,000 million. This is easily the most powerful artificial light ever produced.

HAS DOMESTICATED TASTES.

Moose Grazes With Cattle on Ranch In Albera.

The Rio Alta Ranch in Alberta has an unusual visitor. Feeling lonely, a fine moose has come down out of his rocky habitation in the mountains, and has been grazing with the cattle. It is being watched with interest by the manager of the ranch and appears to be on quite fraternal terms with the cattle and mixes with them freely.

The herd takes the stranger's coming as natural and do not interfere with it in any way. They have little right to, for they are prolific usurpers of a land, which once was his.

England's Oldest Family.

Efforts are being made to discover which is the oldest family in England. Mr. Oswald Barron, one of the greatest living authorities on mediaeval heraldry, has compiled a list in the following order:

1, Wake; 2, Tichborne of Tichborne; 3, Shirley of Ettington; 4, Carteret; 6, Leighton; 6, Okeover of Okeover; 7, Nevill Strindrop; 8, Langton; 9, Wrottesley; 10, Berkeley; 11, Ogle; 12, Gresley of Drakelow; 13, Bassett; and 14, Fitzwilliam.

A Pound of Spiders' Web.

Nearly 700,000 spiders would be required to produce a pound of web, according to estimates of scientists who have experimented with the substance as a substitute for silk. A single spider has been known to spin a thread 34,800 yards long.

Parks and open spaces in the County of London cover an area of 7,355 acres out of a total county area of 74,850 acres.

A GERMLESS ISLE.

Meat Exposed Outdoors Keeps for Eight Months.

Found: The magic land where you cannot get ill. At least this fair country is absolutely germ-free. It is well known that almost all diseases are caused by germs. On the northern island of Novaya Zemyla, you would run very slim chances to be knocked down with some disease, says a Science Service bulletin.

Dr. A. F. Kazansky, a scientist of the Central Geophysical Observatory at Leningrad, Russia, is responsible for the discovery. Polar explorers had many times noted the remarkable purity of polar air. Accurate tests were lacking, however. So, when Dr. Kazansky went to spend a winter at the Soviet geophysical station, Matochkin Shar, on the lonely Polar island, Novaya Zemlya, he was prepared to make the tests. The results he obtained were almost startling. Microbes were not to be found on this enchanted island. No matter what Dr. Kazansky tested — air, earth, water, dust, not a germ could be discovered. Even wild game shot by hunters was germ-free. Such exceptional purity is considered to be a record.

Many different ingenious tests were tried out in the attempt to hun down some germs. Sterile dishes with an agar-agar jelly especially suitable for bacterial growth were left outdoors for several hours at a stretch. Then the dishes were placed in an incubator and warmed, to stimulate the germ life. In no cases were any microbe colonies found. Just for comparison it may be said that a similar dish with jelly, exposed for fifteen minutes to city air, would grow over with germ colonies too numerous to count.

Another highly spectacular test conducted by Dr. Kazansky was as follows. Fresh juicy meat in an open glass jar was left outdoors, where air, dust and rain could reach it. For eight months it was exposed to the elements. Yet when Dr. Kazansky examined the meat again, no trace of rotting was found. The meat was as fresh as when packed in the jar, almost a year ago.

D'ARTAGNAN REALLY LIVED.

Pulled Even More Phenomenal Stunts In Reality Than In Fiction.

Few who have enjoyed the thrills contained in Dumas' immortal "Three Musketeers" know that the intrepid D'Artagnan was taken from life, and was not merely a creation of the author's brain. He was a creature of flesh and blood. The truth about the man, just came to light through researches in his native Armagnac, is that he pulled even more phenomenal stunts in reality than Dumas ever dared to imagine in fiction.

It was on his reputation that the famous French adage was founded that says, "Where a Frenchman dares not go, there a Gascon will advance without fear or trembling."

M. Charles Samaran, a native of Armagnac, in the extreme south of France, has made the sensational discovery that destroys the legends about D'Artagnan without diminishing their charms. The chevalier was born under the reign of Louis XIV. in the chateau of Castelmore, the seventh son of a seventh son. His father was Seigneur Bertrand de Batz and his mother Francoise de Montesquieu, daughter of the Lord of Armagnac in Bigorre. Upon receiving the king's commission he adopted the name of his mother.

AN ESPERANTO HOTEL.

Even Maids Will Be Required to Speak Universal Language.

Madison, Wis., says the Milwaukee Journal, is to have the first Esperanto hotel, according to plans of Glenn P. Turner, hotel owner. He is an ardent Esperanto devotee and believes so much in the future development of this universal language that he is converting the Sherlock house into an Esperanto hotel. He expects to adventize it as such in the Esperanto directory published by the Universal Esperanto Association.

Mr. Turner aims to have all the hotel employees speak the language. The clerk is now studying it and several of the employes already know the rudiments. Mr. Turner is advertizing for a girl who speaks Esperanto to work as maid at the hotel. If none applies, a girl who is willing to learn the language will be hired. The Esperanto congress of the United States met in Madison last summer and created considerable local interest in the language. Free instruction was given once a week to interested persons by a local pastor.

EFFECTS OF ALTITUDE.

To Study High and Low Pressure on Heart Disease and Pneumonia.

The effects of high and low pressures upon persons afflicted with heart disease and pneumonia will be studied at the Harvard Medical School.

To aid in the projected series of experiments, a steel pressure tank, 35 feet long and eight feet in diameter, is now being installed at the school.

According to Harvard authorities it will be possible to vary pressures from 60 pounds to the square inch down to a minimum as low as would be experienced at an altitude of five miles.

An effort also will be made to determine whether caisson workers suffer injury to health by being forced to labor under unusual pressure conditions.

Peculiarities of Paderewski.

When Paderewski goes on tour, he takes with him three pianos, which were specially made for him in Paris. One is tuned before each concert by Paderewski's own tuner, also from Paris, and then it is placed under lock and key until the concert begins. Immediately after each concert, the pianos are packed by Paderewski's staff of eight men and sent by road to the next centre of the tour.

Paderewski will not play if he mislays his walking stick. It is his mascot. One of his valets most important duties is to hand this stick to his master, before he leaves for a concert.

FROM EAST TO WEST, WITH THE CATTLEMEN

IN 1671, the Acadians, Canada's earliest farmers, possessed only 866 cattle and 407 sheep. In 1925 there were 16,500,000 cattle, sheep and swine on Canadian farms and ranches.

This industry to-day not only supplies Canada with meat and dairy products, but also exports a large surplus, competing successfully with products of similar nature abroad.

The Canadian Bank of Commerce was among the first to establish branches in the Eastern stock-raising centres. Throughout the West it has earned the title "Pioneer". This Bank has 470 branches in agricultural districts.
