WANT ADS PULL

Planners, Council Agree Master Annexation Zones

A master plan of development for lands Milton seeks to annex from Oakville and Esquesing was adopted in principle by members of Milton Council and Milton Planning Board, when they held a joint meeting Thursday to discuss the future of the area around the town.

The plan adopted was one drawn by the Planning Board in 1961 and covered not only the 2,500 acres the town is presently seeking to annex, but also a larger area around the perimeter. The plan shows industrial development on Milton's north, east and west boundaries, with residences concentrated mainly in the south and south-east sections of the land under consideration.

O.K. by Oakville

Planning Board chairman Murray Kernighan summed up, "We will be in a stronger position when we go to the Municipal Board, if we present this map and tell them this is what we want." He noted the Oakville Planning Board had favored the Milton plan with the exception of the area east of Ontario St. and south of the Base Line, which Milton had slated for industrial development and Oakville suggested should be residential.

When it was agreed the two town bodies favored the mapped-out plan, discussions ranged over the various stages of development for the annexation area. Planners agreed the area around Johnson Bros. Trucking yard north of the Base Line would be ideal for the initial industrial development, as this area is serviced and the new new town water line runs right past the property. It was noted owner William Johnson was agreeable to co-operating with the town to get industry to use the lands.

The initial residential development should be the Sewell property north of Highside Drive in the present town, it was agreed.

Industrial Park

Talk then turned to the Industrial Commission's request for an industrial park, which was submitted to council in January. The Planning Board has already approved the move, and agreed to assist council in choosing the location. Queried about council's decision at Thursday's meeting, Mayor Childs replied council had not discussed the matter yet, but would try to make a decision in the very near future.

Discussions ranged over the apartment freeze and the subdivider's by-law, before the joint meeting ended. The planners came up with several points for council to consider before the subdivision agreement is finalized.

Later in a planning board meeting, members reviewed the need for a separate by-law placing limits on neon signs. It was noted that the City of Toronto had given business firms a 1970 deadline to remove signs that overhang the streets. Planner David Thompson suggested the town needed someone to enforce the sign by-law. "It seems if you ask for permission, you are refused, but if you don't ask, nobody says anything," he said, referring to a recent case in town.

Higgins Twins On TV Sunday

The accordion playing Higgins twins, Sandy and Cindy, will appear on the popular Channel 11 TV show "Tiny Talent Time" on Sunday afternoon. The eight-year-old youngsters, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Art Higgins of Oak Street, have been taking accordion lessons from Tommy Renzetti for five months.
