

HRPS brings back Project Holiday

After a successful debut last year, the Halton Regional Police Service is about to renew an initiative to address types of criminal activity that have been proven to noticeably increase when the holidays roll around.

Project Holiday 2.0 begins Monday in the One District region and runs until Jan. 4.

The impetus for the project came after an analytical evaluation of crime statistics in the North Halton area from past holiday seasons.

"During the month of December, with the Christmas stressors, there were certain trends for the police service that started to happen," said HRPS Det. Const. Barry Malciw.

"We looked at those trends and formed a project team consisting of detectives with some uniformed support to target the seven components where we saw an increase and proactively tackle those areas."

Malciw said several proactive strategies will be employed in the target areas, including RIDE programs, checks on persons with court-imposed conditions, targeted traffic enforcement at high-collision intersections, media awareness for domestic and mental health incidents, proactive retail theft initiatives and increased police presence at notorious crime locations.
