It will be seen by their advertisement in our columns that the great Music Store of Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston, although exactly on the edge of the burnt district, entirely escaped injury. This is good news, as their books are used everywhere, and the musical and reading public would quickly miss them if the issue were delayed. It is also a peculiar pleasure to read O. D. & Co.'s cleverly shifting advertisements, when keeping well posted as to what is the standard music of the day.

ABSOLUTE AND ENDURING.—Mr Barnard, recently returned from the continent of Europe, whence he had been sent by the Quebec Government as Emigration agent, delivered a lecture lately in Montreal, in which he strongly urged the formation of Colonization Societies, the cultivation of the beet for the manufacture of sugar, and the assumption of the duty of promoting emigration by the Federal Government on an extensive scale. The lecture has been printed and will doubtless have a good effect.

NEW PEWS.—CHURCH CHAT.—The sale of pews in the New Christ Church, Sparks street, resulted as follows:—Sherril Powell, two pews, $5.0 and $255; P C Clemow, $825; Francis Clemow, $210; Chas Magee $521; Dr Hill, $590; Charles Hubard, $330; C A Bate, $6.0; G P Boyce, $550; H V Noel ±600; A C Kelty, two pews, $567; T McGarity, $5 0; John Simpson, $500; J Gouin, $240; J Torrance, two pews, $330; W Sprague, $300; G Wickstead, $290; Philip Thompson, two pews, $1,172.

RINK MUSIC HALL.—Last night, after a lively farce, the Field of the Cloth of Gold was produced for the first time by the Agnes Wallace Troupe, Mr. Villa appearing as Queen Catherine, and Miss Wallace as Earl Darnley. The character of the burlesque was not so well adapted as Clorinda for the display of Mr Villa's admirable versatility, but Miss Wallace played the part of Earl Darnley with all her conventional sprightliness, and her appearance never failed to be greeted with applause. The second act possess more spectacular attractions, and the splendors and comforts of the ancient tournament are represented with most amusing incidents. The minor characters are ably sustained by the members of the troupe, who work very well together. The performance last night was diversified with a variety of musical performances, vocal and instrumental, which were very excellent of their kind, and well received. In the popular song, "If ever I Cease to Love," four members of the company joined, including Miss Wallace and Mr. Villa, and the loed hits and allusions to recent events were received with great laughter and applause. The entertainment this evening will be set apart for the special benefit of Sam Villa, when by request of many of our citizens, he will repeat his world renowed impersonation of Clorinda, preceded by a splendid farce.

The Wesleyan Methodists are moving in the matter of the erection of a new church in the eastern section of the city, and a lot for that purpose has been purchased from the Donald Dow estate, which is located on the corner of King and Besserer streets. The plans for the new Church, which were got up by Mr. Langley of Toronto, the architect who made the plans for the new Metropolitan Church in that city, have been adopted by the building committee. The new church is to be built of Nepean stone, with Ohio sandstone dressings; and the spire of which will be some 150 feet in height. The inside measurement of the edifice will be 49x92, while the lecture room at the rear of the church will be 33x55. The church will afford comfortable accommodation for 1,000 persons, while the lecture room, with its gallery, will hold 400. From the lecture room there will be an infant class room, capable of holding 72. The style of the church will be a modern winged gothic, and when erected will stand comparison with the other churches in the eastern section of the city. The cost will be some $50 000, and there is little doubt but the generous citizens of Ottawa will contribute liberally to the building fund of this new church, and thus aid in spreading the enlightening rays of the Gospel.

NOTRE DAME DU SACRE COEUR.

A semi private vocal and instrumental entertainment was given in the new hall of the Convent Notre Dame Du Sacre Coeur, Rideau street, on Tuesday evening. The concert was given in honour of the Lady Superior General, and among those present may be mentioned, Alle. Heney and Lapierre, Drs. Beaubien and St. Jean, and Messrs. Burrows and [illegible], besides two Franciscan Sisters, from [illegible]nce, three Sisters of Providence from [illegible] also Fathers Taberet, Lepers, Froc, and Gladeau. The following is the programme disposed of on the occasion:

Instrumental Overture, "Johann of Paris," on two pianos, performed by Misses A. Leprohon, R. Ryan, Z. Cockburn, and E. Patton.

Grand chorus, "Barcarolle," by the pupils

Piano Solo—Mr. Kearns.

Vocal Solo, "Sinburthil Serenade," Mrs. Beauchen; also a vocal solo by Mrs P. Ryan.

Quartette, "Tancredi," by four of the Sisters.

An operatic solo by Mrs Shepherd, Miss C. Rittenstein, and Miss C. Dewe.

Piano solo, "Les Courriers," by Mrs H. Lapierre.

Solo, by Mrs. Corbett and Miss Prosser

Duet, taken from la Dame Blanche, by Misses A. Leprohon and A. Fichette.

Quartette overture, le la Dame Blanche, by Misses O. Cockburn, R. Leprohon, A. Fichette and R. Ryan.

It is almost needless to say that the entire programme was rendered in a most excellent manner, and the entertainment throughout gave a high order, reflecting credit on the management of the Sisters of the Institution in providing such a treat.

At a recent meeting of the Presbyterian ministers of St John, N. B., it was resolved to hold a public celebration in memory of the great Reformer, John Knox. The three hundredth anniversary of his death will fall on Monday, the 24th of this month, on which day most of the ministers will refer to the event in their services. The celebration will be held on the evening of Monday, the 30th, in St. David's church, when addresses will be delivered on such subjects as the following:—The Life and Times of Knox; Presbyterianism in Britain; Presbyterianism in America, and Presbyterianism in the World.

The annual Dominion Thorghmen's Association of the County of Welland took place on the 7th instant, on the farm of Mr John Hart, Stamford township. The locomotive was fine, but shortly after twelve it clouded over and we had a very drenching rain for nearly an hour and a half, when it ceased off and the day was fine. The match was a good one in every respect superior to any previous match. The work was splendid, and the spectators were numerous. Thirty two ploughmen competed for prizes in the different classes. The soil was a clay loam rather stiff, but on the whole very well adapted for the match. The prizes in all amounted to nearly $150, several handsome donations being given.—St. Catherine's Times.

TERRIBLE BUTCHERY.

[From the Kansas City Times.]

On last Sunday night, Dr. Stark of this city received a despatch from Topeka, for Dr. Milligan, which was at once forwarded to that gentleman's residence in West Kansas. The despatch was from a warm personal friend of Dr. Milligan, summoning him to Topeka immediately. He supposed at once that something unusual was the matter, so, bidding his wife and family adieu, he left for Topeka. That same night his house was destroyed by fire, leaving his family out in the streets. Dr. Milligan found on his arrival at Topeka that he had been called upon to attend the bedside of the wife of an old friend of his, who was suffering from a severe illness. He prescribed for the patient and started out upon the street, when he was met by Dr. Samuel Ashmore, with whom he was upon terms of the closest intimacy. He was warmly welcomed, and accompanied him to his house, and during his stay in Topeka was with him frequently, but during this time observed no signs of anything suspicious or venous in Ashmore's conduct. He informed him that he had made a bet of one thousand dollars on Grant's election, and was confident of winning his wager.

On Wednesday morning Dr. Milligan met with Dr. Ashmore, and was invited by him to accompany him out for a drive over the city, which invitation was accepted. Ashmore appeared quite flushed and excited by liquor, and very boisterously jubilant over the election of General Grant. Soon after leaving Ashmore's residence, Dr. Milligan observed that the team they were driving was a fractious one, and that in Ashmore's inebriated condition it was liable to run away. He took the reins from Ashmore, and said he would drive, but he could manage the team better. Ashmore now showed the first indications of the frenzy and madness which terminated in the butchery of his wife. He drew a revolver and pointed it at Dr. Milligan, and told him to give up the reins or he would shoot him dead in an instant, at the same time cocking the pistol. Dr. Milligan succeeded at the violence manifested, jumped out of the buggy and started to walk back to the house of Dr. Ashmore. The latter started the team, but fell out of the buggy before going very far. Dr. Milligan ran to his assistance, stopped the team, and assisted Dr. Ashmore to get in again. He then turned the buggy and drove back to the house.

Ashmore tied his team before his door and entered the house. In a short time afterwards Dr. Milligan was startled to hear two shots fired in the house, one immediately after the other. He hurried as fast as possible to the [illegible] with anxious foreboding of [illegible] entering the house, his sight. In the [illegible] Dr. Ashmore engaged in the act of chopping out [illegible] with a common hatchet. [illegible] dead in the centre of the kitchen floor, shot through the head. He had fired at her immediately on entering the house, and killed her while she was attempting to escape by snooting her through the back of the head. He then picked up a hatchet, and was engaged in the murderous act of chopping out her brains when Dr. Milligan entered the room. Ashmore immediately sought refuge or concealment behind a stove or bureau and drew his revolver. Dr. Milligan perceiving that it was a desperate case, returning prompt and desperate action, rushed upon the drunken madman, when a desperate struggle ensued. Ashmore fought and struggled with the fury of a madman, which he certainly was. He received some heavy blows on the head and face from Milligan, and was with some assistance finally secured. It required the combined strength of ten men to take him from the house to the jail, so fierce and so superhumanly strong was he in his desperation. He is securely confined in jail awaiting investigation. It is the most horrible affair ever known in Topeka, and has caused a great sensation in that beautiful young city.

First-class Tailoring Department now in full operation, under the superintendence of a first-class Cutter. All work and perfect fit guaranteed.

IMAGINATION IN ANIMALS.

Milverton: I maintain that my dictum is substantially right, that you have only, by the aid of imagination, to enter fully into what we may reasonably conceive to be the feelings of animals, to be most tender and kind to them. Even when talk as we have just had, which might not appear at first to bear upon the subject, is most useful. Only think of the ways, habits, and peculiarities of any creature, and you become tolerant towards it. I will exemplify what I mean. The horse is a most timid and nervous animal. By the way, I observed that not one of you was inclined in your imaginary choice of animal life, to become a horse or any animal that had much to do with man. Well, the horse, as I said, is a most timid and nervous animal. The moment you have recognized this fact, you are able, by the aid of imagination, to enter into its terrors, and you do not beat a creature merely because it is afraid.

Cranmer: I come to what I always believe in as the main specific for all evils, namely, education. Milverton talks of imagination, and makes too much of that I think. Imagination must have a basis of facts to build upon. Now, it is a fact, I believe, as Milverton states, that horse is a timid and nervous and timid animal. It is a large piece of paper, or anything else, or an ungainly looking [illegible] in the road and it takes it to be some dangerous living creature. That ought to be told to people from the first, especially to children. I have never written a book, but it really seems to me that I could write a book, if I possessed the requisite knowledge——

Ebenezer: Well, most of us could do that.

Cranmer:——if I possessed the requisite knowledge, [illegible] would be most serviceable in [illegible] and, indeed, should be a [illegible] schools. I have never [illegible] upon animals which regards the points I inculcate.

[illegible] of the great evils in the horse, [illegible] animals is that they are necessarily subject to hirelings. Now the owner of an animal might, in nineteen cases out of twenty, be trusted to exercise what I may call an uncritical kindness towards it. At any rate, he would be intentional in cruelty. Now, he is from the want of sufficient knowledge, just as we err in the ordinary management of our houses and our families, simply from ignorance of what it much concerns us to know. To lessen this superficial ill-treatment, which perhaps had better be called visible cruelty, would be considerable gain; and it is only to be acquired by the owner having some means of ascertaining how his animal is treated by his hireling. I would have some means by which, (in the case, for example, of cab driving) there should be in a way a communication open between the passenger and the owner. I have often longed to tell the owner how unworthily his agent acts for him. In every hired carriage I would have the means of doing that. A small locked box, in which one could deposit one's complaint, and of which the master alone had the key, would enable one to do so.—By Sic ariah of Helps in Good Words.
