A STAGE EXPERIENCE IN NEVADA.

Attack by Highwaymen—A Brave Messenger.

A telegram to the San Francisco Chronicle gives the following account of a highway robbery:

The stage leaving Eureka, Nev., last night at 9 o'clock, on arriving at Diamond Wells, eight miles from here, was stopped by two highwaymen, who made the usual demand for Wells, Fargo & Co.'s treasure box. The first intimation that those on board the stage had that something was wrong was the appearance of a man on the road, who ordered the driver to hold on. The team was a spirited one, and the order had to be repeated several times before it was brought to a standstill, when another individual stepped to the side of the stage and ordered the driver to pass down the box—a request that was acceded to without hesitation.

While the man at the box was endeavouring to burst it open or knock the lid off, Jim Miller, the special messenger, was preparing for work. At first he intended to use his revolver, but wishing to make a sure shot, changed his mind and went for his shot-gun which was behind him. In attempting to draw the weapon out, the other man, who was standing guard in front, observed his action and ordered him to keep quiet. Not heeding the caution, he succeed in getting the gun out, and immediately fired on the treasure robber. The robber on guard fired at him and the driver. The latter narrowly escaped being riddled with shot. Miller was less fortunate, he being severely wounded in the right arm and left foot, and which incapacitated him from rendering further service. The man at the box ceased work and also fired a shot from a revolver, but without effect. The driver, not knowing that Jim Miller had been shot, said:—"Jim, go after them with your revolver," and started the team, which was very restless, and with difficulty kept standing. Hardly had the team started than the leaders were suddenly plunged to the ground, caused by their being tripped up by a rope extended across the road. The robbers to make sure of their game, had taken a rope from the granary to the station. The horses, now frantic with fright, became entangled, and the leaders, breaking the swinging pole, freed themselves and were lost, but with the remaining four animals the coach returned to town. John Lamfort, one of the passengers, got out of the stage, and returned to the scene of the conflict, secured the treasure box, which was uninjured.

The passengers inside, one lady and three gentlemen, though frightened at first, took in the situation, and kept their seats during the excitement, which lasted but a few moments, after which they rendered valuable assistance in securing the box and temporarily dressing the wounds of the messenger. The return of the stage at twelve o'clock last night occasioned considerable surprise among those who were on the streets, but when the cause was explained the most intense excitement prevailed. Miller was taken to the International Hotel, and on examination of his wounds it was feared that he was more badly hurt than at first was supposed.

RUSSIA—POLICY IN CENTRAL ASIA.

Profiting by our experience in India, the Russian Government, by allowing the chiefs of Central Asia to remain in nominal independence, is obtaining all the advantages of an extension of frontier without having to incur any of the expenses and anxieties of direct administration. Khiva has been so shattered by last year's campaign that it is doubtful how long this policy can be maintained towards it; but Bokhara, though humbled and greatly impoverished by the loss of Samarkand, appears still to possess the elements of regular government, and in the meantime is losing no opportunity of manifesting its regard for Russia. A letter from Tashkend gives some idea of the civilities the Emir pays to his Christian visitors. Several Russian officers from Tashkend left that place on a tour in the Bokhara territory, with a view of taking photographs of the people and scenery. Having learned at Samarkand that the Emir had gone to Shihr Sabz for the Fast of Ramzan, they left for that place. A native official met them at the Bokhara frontier and welcomed them in the name of the Bey of Kitab, a place at which they arrived the following day, and were received in state by the Bey, at the head of a regiment of "Surbayes." They afterwards arrived at Shuhr Sabz, where they were received in great state by the Bey, an old man of seventy, named Abdpol Kureen Divan Begee. All the troops cantoned at Shuhr Sabz, about 2,000 men, lined the streets leading to the Palace. They presented arms as the travellers passed them, and seven bands of music are said to have struck up various tunes. The Emir arrived at Shuhr Sabz on the 6th ult., and the reception of the travellers was fixed for the 20th. The evening before they sent the Emir photographs of scenes in Tashkend and Kokand, and also portraits of Khodayar Khan and persons of his Court, at which the Emir expressed great delight. On the morning of the 20th they were received in State by the Emir, who expressed to them the pleasure their arrival had caused him. Lieut. Boobourich, political assistant to Gen. Golovachoff, the commander of Samarkand, then communicated complimentary messages from his chief. The Emir replied as follows:—"I thank you. I am very much pleased. Your coming has been very agreeable to me. All you see here is at your disposal. Be Exactly as if you were at home; visit all the places you like, and go everywhere. The more people come from Russia to see us and the more that go from Bokhara to Russia to see you, the better will it be for both countries. There will be greater friendship, and that is my great desire."

Photographs having been mentioned, the Emir expressed the greatest desire to know all about the art, and gave two officers permission to photograph anything they liked. One of the party, a Mr. Krifyoff, took advantage of this permission to go and photograph the ancient citadel of the place, and the Emir, who suddenly came upon him while he was at work, begged that his portrait and those of several of his courtiers might be taken, a request which was, of course, acceded to immediately. The party then left for Kaghi and Bokhara, and expected to return to Tashkend by the 17th inst.—English paper.
