Orangeville residents did not approve of the ban, stealing a 'no tobogganing' sign at Murray's Mountain and protesting by sledding down the hill.

In Hamilton, tobogganing was previously banned for the same reason in every part of the city, but Mayor Fred Eisenberger encouraged council to put "the fun back in winter" and to allow the activity in certain areas.

In November, its council voted to appoint three municipally owned hills as toboggan hills, allocating $36,000 a year to maintain them.

As far as Harris knows, there has never been a ban on the winter fun, saying Halton Hills Council has been confident people are aware of the risks associated with negligent or reckless behaviour while taking advantage of the steep hills.

"I think there's a general understanding that people are using at their own risk," he said. "I think that's where Council felt it was a bit of an overstatement to outright ban it."
