The high hopes of Nugent were dashed almost as soon as they had arisen. Flight now would be simply impossible, and he could have execrated the unusual speed which brought the packet down at least an hour earlier than usual.

"All is not lost!" he cried, in reply to Mrs. Grafton's words. "After what has passed to-night I will never give up my bride. Adieu, Lora, but only for the present. You shall see me to-morrow."

A light flashed in the hall, and steps came toward the front part of the door. There was no time for further words, for Nugent just had barely time to plunge into the shadow of the trees when Grafton stepped upon the portico, carrying a lamp in his hand.

The flush had died from his face, and he was now pale almost to ghastliness. His brow was drawn, and his lips strongly compressed, as he peered around, muttering:

"I am sure I heard some one talking out here as I came through the hall, yet I can see no one. What can it all mean? I wonder what can have become of Julia? She promised to watch for the arrival of the boat, and wake me in time to meet Ford. It is strange that I could sleep with such a weight of care upon me; but it is said that the condemned man sleeps soundly enough on the eve of his execution."

"I am here, George," said a gentle voice close beside him. "I have been on the balcony with Lora, watching the approach of the steamer. We could neither of us sleep after the excitement we have had to-night. I was coming to warn you of Mr. Ford's speedy arrival at the house, but the whistle aroused you, I suppose."

"It's enough to wake the dead," said Grafton, brusquely. "It started me out of a deep sleep, and for a moment I thought the day of judgment had come, and Gabriel was blowing his summons to all the guilty wretches on earth to come up and be judged. I remembered soon enough what it was, and what meaning it had for me; but it wasn't much better for me than if Gabriel had really come."

Mrs. Grafton laid her hand on his shoulder, and said:

"You look and speak so unlike yourself, George, that I scarcely know you to-night. You have refused to tell me what there is between you and the man who is coming, and that leaves me no resource but to believe that it involves dishonour—or—or perhaps something worse."

Grafton re-entered the hall, and placed the lamp he carried upon a table. He turned to his wife, and slowly said:

"We have spoken enough on this subject, Julia. It is one that must be henceforth tabooed between us. I am about to escape from the clutch of the man who has been my worst enemy, and I will never betray to you what placed me in his power. If I have merited punishment, I shall escape it; for after to-morrow there will be no evidence to criminate me, even if the offence had been heavier than it was. Set your heart at rest concerning me, for no act of mine shall bring disgrace upon you. Let that suffice; I hear footsteps approaching, and I must deck my face in smiles to welcome our newly-arrived guest."

He turned abruptly towards the door, and walked forth in the moonlight to meet the solitary man who came with rapid steps towards the house, swinging a satchel carelessly in his hand.

The two met at the gate of the enclosure, and shook hands on the most cordial terms.

The steamer was already speeding on her way, for she had only landed to put Mr. Ford on shore.

The greeting between the two men had no tragic element in it. Grafton only said:

"How do you do, Ford?" and the latter replied:

"I am as fresh as a rose, and most anxious to see my daughter. By the way, I saw a suspicious-looking figure flitting through the shadows as I came along. I wonder if it was some moonstruck lover, who had been breathing a sentimental song beneath the lattice of my young queen of hearts."

"I permit no such nonsense as that," said Grafton, lightly. "A rose, with all its sweetest leaves unfolded, would aptly represent your daughter. She is fair and gracious, and sweet as the flower to which I have compared her."

Ford shrugged his shoulders, and indifferently said:

"I am glad to hear that Lora is so attractive. A woman without beauty and fascination would have no charm for me, even if she is my own daughter."

By this time they had drawn near the house, and the new-comer found the parlour lighted up, and the mistress of the mansion waiting to receive him with that quiet composure which women so often assume to conceal an unquiet heart.

Seen by the bright light of the lamps, Stephen Ford was a very remarkable specimen of stalwart manhood. He was more than six feet in height, and broad in proportion, though his figure was not heavily made for a man of his unusual stature. His head was large, well-formed, and partially bald, his pale-brown hair sprinkled with silver, and his long, amber-hued beard thickly streaked with it. The last, with a heavy mustache, concealed his square, firm-set jaw and resolute mouth.

Beneath a broad, massive brow gleamed a pair of keen, gray eyes, full of observation and thought, and there was nothing in the face which indicated meanness or craftiness of nature, deep as was the mistrust of those he had come to visit. Stephen Ford was that most dangerous of human vampires, a man of noble presence and gracious speech, who won confidence only to abuse it; who trampled on the rights of others with supreme indifference, yet went on his way, carrying with him the prestige of brilliant success; how won was best known to himself and the few dependents he was compelled to employ in the furtherance of his plans.

With the graceful ease of a man of society, he saluted his hostess, and said:

"A thousand pardons, dear madam, for keeping you up till this late hour of the night. I had no idea that you would do me so much honour as to sit up to offer me a midnight welcome, and I assure you I appreciate the compliment highly. You are scarcely looking a day older than when I saw you last, Mrs. Grafton, yet it was years ago."

"Yes—six years, Mr. Ford; and in all that time you have rarely written to your daughter; yet—yet—if I can put faith in my husband's assertions, you have come hither to remove her from my loving care. I hope you will think better of it."

She had not meant to say this, but the words came to her lips almost without any volition of her own, and she gazed eagerly into the handsome face that bent over her.

"Two reproaches in the first words addressed me! Fie, madam! on such a reception as that! Let us ignore unpleasant questions in this first hour of meeting, and seek to establish our old pleasant relations before referring to disagreeable subjects. To-morrow we will discuss our affairs and settle what is to be done. I had hoped to see my daughter beside you; has she retired, knowing, too, that I was expected? Young eyes should be more wakeful than that, I think."

TO BE CONTINUED.

The Tramp and the Woman.

Dakota Bell.

"Madam," said a tramp as he called at the back door of a Sioux Falls residence, "gimme a bite!"

"No, sir, can't do it."

"Why not, madam?"

"You're able to work, sir—I don't believe in encouraging vagrancy. Go on away now, or I shall scream for help."

"All right, madam—don't holler. But I called on the women next door last evening, and she gave me a very different answer, madam."

"She was just fool enough to go and give you something, I suppose?"

"Oh, no, madam, she didn't give me nothin' neither, but she gave me a much different reason. Good-by, madam!"

"Hold on just a minute! What did she say?"

"She came to the door all dressed up in a new yaller dress, an' seemed very much excited, madam, and when she opens the door I looks in an' sees a man in there sittin' in a cheer, madam."

"Mercy, has it come to this with her! I wouldn't hardly believe it. Here, don't go away—take this, my good man."

"Thankee, madam. Baker's bread? Yes, I gene'rally prefers it to ho'-made bread, 'specially where they ain't none too good cooks. The butter is jes' a little tainted, madam. Hain't got no jell to put on it, I s'pose. Oh, you have; all right; jell improves it powerfully. No, thankee, I don't keer 'bout any fruit cake—better throw it in the slop-pan, where the children won't get it, madam. Any pie? Ah, yes, correct, that cream is good, but this apple rather lays over it. I'll put this cold chicken in my pocket. That'll do, madam, is 'bout all I can carry."

"But what was it that woman said to you?"

"Why, she seemed excited like, 'sif she was goin' some place, an' says:—'Please go 'away, sir, we hain't got nothing in the house to eat!'"

"A pretty excuse to get you away! But that strange man——"

"He proved to be her husband, madam. He come out an' kicked me through the top of a shade tree an' then chased me two blocks! He's pizen on tramps, madam! Good-bye—put jes' a little more cream in yer pie-crust, an' it'll improve it!"

Learning a Trade.

The Jewellers' Journal argues—we think wisely—in favor of boys learning a trade in the shop. It says:

When a boy has gained the practical knowledge which every boy of the least ability will naturally acquire in a shop he is fitted to convert the knowledge which a college or university course offers him into useful wisdom."

The greatest fallacy of modern educationists is that a boy can better be taught to do something by theory than he can learn to do something by practice. This has never proved true, and there is no reason to believe that it ever will. There are thousands of college graduates in this country to-day whose prospects of getting a living are extremely precarious, because they know nothing except what they were taught at college. On the other hand, there are a great many who have had their ideas broadened by a college course, and have correspondingly benefited thereby. Simple as the whole matter is, there are many who cannot be made to see it, and there are helped along sometimes, in their blindness, by those who ought to know better. The idea that a college course alone will fit a man to get a decent living is as fallacious as the idea that such a course cannot help him in getting along in the world. The best advice, in our opinion, that can be given boys in this respect is: Do not depend upon what you may acquire at some institution of learning to get you comfortably through the world. The failures will be a hundred to one. On the contrary, do not despise what you may learn at schools and colleges. This will be a mistake, though not so fatal as the one first named.—American Machinist.

Is There a Methodist Boycott.

Rev. Dr. Potts in his remarks on College Federation the other evening said that, although the Methodists of this country comprised one-third of the population, they were scarcely represented in any of the higher positions in the land. Only one Methodist judge sat upon the Bench of Justice Rose; in the Ottawa Ministry, no one; in the Dominion Senate, only two or three; in the Ontario Legislature, only half a dozen or so; and if the High School Boards could keep them out in favor of Toronto University, they would be kept out. We told the doctor afterwards that for one thing we felt deeply thankful—there were no Methodists in the Ottawa Ministry. We have a profound respect for good Methodists, and we would not like to see them in any position where they would be in constant danger of being morally polluted and corrupted; nor did we wish any of them, good or bad, such a fate as consignment to that state of oblivious deadness and uselessness, the Senate. As to the other positions, it never occurred to us that there were no Methodists in them. So long as they were well and worthily filled we never questioned whether the incumbents were Methodists, Episcopalians, Catholics Presbyterians or Baptists. Soon as good Methodists are in demand to fill good fat positions, out of danger of contamination, we will present ourselves.—Mitchell Recorder.

Sam Jones and His Political Party.

New York Sun

The great American Hellbender, the Rev. Sam Jones, said in his recent revival at Plattsburg, Mo.:

"When the Democracy put into their platform that the are opposed to all sumptuary laws, it was time for me to get out."

Get, Samuel; and until you get a little sense don't come back.

NOT A BOOK AGENT.

Mr. H. Watson, Druggist, is not a book agent, but has the agency in Milton for Johnson's Tonic Bitters, which he can heartily recommend for any complaint to which a tonic medicine is applicable. This valuable medicine has been used with most astonishingly good results in cases of general debility, weakness, irregularities peculiar to females, extreme paleness, impoverishment of the blood, stomach and liver troubles, loss of appetite, and for that general worn out feeling that nearly every one is troubled with at some part of the year. Don't forget the name Johnson's Tonic Bitters 50c. and $1 per bottle at Watson's drug store.

The Canada Medical and Surgical Journal for September contains the following communications: "Clinical Lecture on a case of Cirrhosis of the Liver," Dr. D. L. Macdonald; "Myxœdema during the course of Chronic Tetany," Dr. James Stewart; "Case of Acute Traumatic Tetanus Recovery," Dr. N. Worthington; "Embryotomy at Eighteenth Week of Pregnancy," Dr. T. A. Alloway; "Cases for Practice," Dr. J. M. Elder; "Reports on Pharmacology and Therapeutics," Dr. James Stewart. There are hospital reports, reviews, reports of society proceedings, selections, interesting editorials and medical items. Published by the Gazette Printing Co., Montreal, at $3 per annum in advance.

A CARD.

To all who are suffering from the errors and indiscretions of youth, nervous weakness, early decay, loss of manhood, &c., I will send a recipe that will cure you, FREE OF CHARGE. This great remedy was discovered by a missionary in South America. Send a self-addressed envelope to the Rev. Joseph T. Inman, Station D, New York City. 12-1yr.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT.—About a week ago Mr. Nelson Anderson, of Puslinch, was leading one of his horses to water when the animal kicked him, striking him across the face, the cork of the shoe cutting out one eye, completely destroying the sight, and through the bridge of his nose, mutilating that fearfully. He is slowly recovering.—Guelph Mercury.

If the Boston Journal is correct, study a woman's eyelids for a sign of a tornado of temper: "If I want to tell a woman's temper I watch her eyelids. You can read a man in the same way, but not so readily. A woman with a fiery temper will move her eyelids with a snap and that snap betrays her. Another who is easy going and hard to arouse moves her eyelids languidly. One with a quick brain and a temper furious when aroused just winks steadily, but neither quickly nor slowly until engaged in interesting conversation."

On one occasion, while in a bar-room, Van Amburgh, the great lion tamer, now dead, was asked how he got his wonderful power over animals. He said:—"It is by showing them that I'm not the least afraid of them, and by keeping my eye steadily on theirs. I'll give you an example of the power of my eye." Pointing to a loutish fellow, who was sitting opposite, Van Amburgh said, "You see that fellow? He's a regular clown. I'll make him come across the room to me, and I won't say a word to him." Sitting down, he fixed his keen steady eye on the man. Presently the fellow straightened himself gradually, got up and came across to Van Amburgh. When he got close enough he drew back his arm and struck the tamer a tremendous blow under the chin, knocking him clear over the chair, with the remark, "I hope you'll know me ag'in!"

ANOTHER COUNTERFEIT.—A new counterfeit American silver dollar is in circulation in the States and it is not unlikely that an attempt will be made to pass some of them here. It is evidently made by casting from a mould taken from a genuine piece. It is not stamped by a die. In color it is somewhat lighter than genuine silver, having a clean, soapy appearance and feel which prevent ordinary grit or dust from adhering to it. The lines of the engraving are not at all sharp, like the original, and the coin is noticeably thicker, the milling lines on the ed e longer, and the diameter slightly shorter. The "s" in the word "pluribus" is noticeably bad.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. 1-1yr

Prof. Goldwin Smith, who recently visited the Northwest Territories, says: "I brought away a decided opinion that the blame of the half-breed rebellion rests mainly on the Ottawa Government. Had the Government been properly informed and served by good agents, it might have easily satisfied the claims and allayed the fears of these poor people, who were naturally disquieted by the advances of a strange civilization which narrowed their hunting grounds, superseded their petty carrying trade with their railways, broke up their mode of life, and seemed to threaten their subsistence. The Government at first was sheltered by military excitement, and afterwards, censure upon it assuming a party form, by party. For want of a little timely attention eight millions had to be spent in suppressing a rebellion which put four hundred ill-armed men between the ages of 16 and 60 in the field. The distant and party Government of Ottawa has been the bane of the North-west."

ST. NICHOLAS FOR SEPTEMBER.—The number opens with a frontispiece, by Mary Hallock Foote, illustrating "Mr. Tyler's Beautiful Mother," a charming tale of life at a seaside watering place, by Nora Perry. A paper that will interest the boys is the article on "Christ's Hospital,"—the famous "Blue-coat School" of London,—where the scholars never wear hats, dress very nearly as the boys did when the school was foundered, hundreds of years ago, and have many quaint and curious customs. The boyhood of William Dean Howells is pleasantly treated by William H. Rideing, and will carry encouragement to many young literary aspirants. General Adam Badeau writes comprehensively and thrillingly of the "Battle of Gettysburg," and of Picketts glorious but futile charge. The serials by Miss Baylor and H. H. Boyesen are continued, with joy for Juan and Juanita, and sorrow for "Fiddle-John's Family." The "Brownies" indulge in Archery, there are poems by Helen Gray Cone, E. D. Sherman, Elizbeth K. Cumins, Henry Tyrrell, O. Herford, and others, and pictures, among others, by Robert Blum, Alfred Brennan, George Wharton Edwards, Henry Sandham, Lizbeth B. Comins, O. Herford, and C. E. Vogt.

"Belvoir, Grantham, Dec 1, 179

"Sirs,—Elliman's Royal Embrocation is used in my stables I think it very useful. RUTLAND.

"Master of Belvoir Hunt.

"Castle Weir, Kington, Herefordshire,

"Dec. 3rd, 1 7

"Gentlemen,—I use the Royal Embrocation in my stables and kennels, and have found it very serviceable. I have also used the Universal Embrocation for lumbago and rheumatism for the last two years, and have suffered very little since using it.

H.R. PRICE, Lieut-Col., Master of Radnorshire Hunt"

ELLIMAN'S ROYAL EMBROCATION,

Sold by Chemists, Stores, and saddlers, Price 2s

The distressing paleness so often observed in young girls and women, is due in a great measure to a lack of the red corpuscles in the blood. To remedy this requires a medicine which produces these necessary little blood constituents, and the best yet discovered is Johnson's Tonic Bitters. Price 50 cts. and $1 per bottle, at Watson's drug store, Milton.

Canadian Champion.

CASH FOR WOOL!

—AT THE—

CAMPBELLVILLE Woolen Mills

I will pay cash for good, clean merchantable Wool, and be prepared to pay half cash and half trade. Strong, coarse, burry and unwashed wools only in trade or in pay for work.

I have a large stock of goods to choose from, consisting of Colored Denims and Cottonades; also Fine Grey Flannels, Check Flannels, Grey Unions and Woolen Dress Goods.

I have also a full line of Summer and Winter Tweeds from 35c to $1 per yd. And I have a good assortment of Sheetings, Blankets, and Horse Blankets all double width, have also a large variety of Yarns, all colors, made from pure Wool. as I use no substitutes for Wool (a boast which few mill owners can make) so that you can depend on good sound Yarns or any other goods you may get manufactured; and always from your own wool
