THE CENTAUR COMPANY, 77 Murray Street, N. Y.

Saturday's Record.

DRUNKS NUMEROUS—ARREST OF AN ALLEGED DYNAMITARD AND A HORSE THIEF.

Chief Constable Bradley had a lively day of it on Saturday. In the morning he, by threats of imprisonment, drove out of town an itinerant "yarb" doctor, who had kept himself full of dive whiskey for several days and had made himself a general nuisance. In the afternoon he found Sam Landsborough drunk and quarreling on Main street with a tough looking stranger, who was also drunk. He attempted at first to make peace between the two men, but it was fighting whiskey they had imbibed and remonstrances were no use. So the chief grabbed Sam and, with the with the assistance of High Constable Chapman, who happened to be in town, ran him in. He then returned for the other man, whom he found in the east end, and who at first seemed disposed to go peacably to jail but got ugly as he drew near to that institution, and just east of the Wallace House refused to go a step further, and showed fight. As he was a big, rough customer, the chief again called upon Mr. Chapman, to help him, and then the fun commenced in earnest. The man tripped Bradley, throwing him violently to the ground, and fell on him. Bradley got from underneath and then he and Chapman tried to drag the man off, but the latter kicked like a mule and repeatedly snapped at his captors with his teeth, all the while keeping up a torrent of villanously profane and obscene language. He kicked the chief in the face, cutting his nose and cheek, which bled considerably, and bit the back of one of his hands, making an ugly wound. The chief, unfortunately, had neither handcuffs nor baton with him, and all he could do to subdue his prisoner was to choke him occasionally. This appeared to have very little effect beyond shutting off some foul language, and exciting the ire of some bystanders, who pitched into the chief for ill-using his prisoner. The man, finding he had sympathy, got if anything more violent then ever, and had not a couple of Nassagaweya farmers turned in and helped the constables there is no saying how long it would have taken to have got him inside the jail. This was accomplished at last, however, and as the fellow continued his violence he was put into the dark cell and kept there until he became more tractable. His name was registered as Joseph Quinn. He and Landsborough remained in jail over Sunday and on Monday were brought before Mayor Hannant. There was no trouble about convicting Laudsborough on the charge of "drunk and disorderly" and he was fined $5 and costs, which he paid. Quinn, however, engaged Mr. D. McGibbon as counsel and made a stubborn defence, but was convicted and fined $5 and costs, or 30 days. He was then arraigned on the charge of assaulting the constable and committed for trial. A Stranger, who was reported to be a contractor on the Guelph branch of the C. P. R., under whom he had been working, tried hard to have him released on bail and offered to pay any fine which night be imposed on him, but the mayor sent him back to jail. Quinn had hardly re-entered that institution when Constable and ex-License Inspector Frazer appeared and arrested him as the perpetrator of the late dynamite outrage at Orangeville, the blowing up of the house of the Scott Act license inspector in that town. Quinn appeared considerably agitated when Mr. Frazer told him what he was wanted for and enquired "When did you see me at Orangeville?" It looks as though the constables have made a most important capture, for Chief Bradley informs us that several attempts were made between the arrest of Quinn and the sitting of the Mayor's court to bribe him (Bradley) to drop the prosecution. The sum of $100 was named, and when that was rejected the chief was asked to name his own figure. The chief deserves credit for the pluck he displayed in making the arrest.

Chief Constable Bradley made another important arrest on Saturday, that of Robert Pitcher, an Englishman lately out, who went to the stable of the Dempsey farm, just outside the town, on Saturday afternoon and stole a horse belonging to Miss Dempsey and an overcoat belonging to her hired man. The chief traced him to Georgetown, arrested him there, brought him back to Milton and lodged him in jail, where he remained over Sunday. On Monday he was brought before Mayor Hannant and committed for trial.

After the chief's departure for Georgetown several drunken blackguards behaved in a most disorderly manner on the streets of the town, but unfortunately there was no one to arrest them and they escaped the punishment they deserved.
