MARK TWAIN.

HE DELIVERS A "PATENT ADJUSTABLE SPEECH," SUITABLE TO ALL OCCASIONS.

At the forefathers' dinner in Boston Mark Twain was introduced by President Hill, who said:

"The title of the next chapter in Post-Prandial Oratory." 'Say the kind thing of them, Horatio.' An intimate friend of the gentleman who is to read this chaper has been a travelling companion of you all, and a most delightful companion you have found him to be. If he has any fault it is the one that he wears glasses that slightly magnify. That is not true, however, of a friend who represents him here to-night. He is a very steady gentleman. I should have said sober had I not feared that the word might be misunderstood. [Laughter.] I have very great pleasure in introducing to you Samuel L. Clemens, the most intimate friend of Mark Twain." [Great laughter and applause.]

MARK TWAIN'S SPEECH.

Mr. Clements was given quite an ovation, and his remarks which followed were so droll in their nature and in the manner in which they were delivered that the hearers were kept upon a broad grin from the first to the last. It would be almost impossible to convey upon paper anything that would give more than an indication of their intense humor, which was derived largely from the peculiar gestures, inflections and actions which accompanied them. This was particularly so of his description of his "patent adjustable speech." He spoke as follows:

"In treating of this subject of post-prandial oratory, a subject which I have long been familiar with, and may be called an expert in observing it in others, I wish to say that a public dinner is the most delightful thing in the whole world to the guests. [Laughter.] That is one fact, and here is another one.

A public dinner is the most unendurable suffering in the whole world to the guest. [Laughter.] These two facts don't seem to jibe, but I will explain. Now at a public dinner when a man knows he is going to be called upon to speak, and is thoroughly well prepared, got it all by heart, and the pauses marked in his head where the applause is going to come in [laughter], that man is simply—is simply in heaven. [Laughter] He won't care to be anywhere else than just where he is. [Laughter.] But when at a public dinner it is getting away along towards the end of things, and a man is sitting over a glass of wine, or his glass of milk [laughter], according to the kind of banquet it is, and sitting there not meditating the danger of it, with some body at his ear bothering him with talk, talk, talk about nothing, who—well, that is just as nearly in the other place as he can be—that man is to be pitied. [Laughter.]

Now he could stand the pity of ten people or a dozen, but there is no misery in this world that is compared to the mass of solidifying compassion of 500. Why, that wide Sahara of sympathizing faces completely takes the tuck out of him. He stands there in his misery and stammers out the usual stuff of not being prepared and all that kind of folly, and he is wandering and stumbling and getting further and further in, and all the time unhappy, and at last he fetches out a poor, miserable, crippled joke, and in his grief and confusion he laughs at it himself, and the others look sick. [Laughter]. He knows he is a defeated man, and so do the others. Now to a humane person that is a heartrending spectacle. It is, indeed. That sort of sacrifice ought to be stopped [laughter], and there is only one way to accomplish it that I can think of, and that is for a man to go always prepared, always loaded, always ready, whether he is likely to be called on or not. You can't defeat that man, you can't pity him at all.

My scheme is this: That he shall carry in his head a connected, and tried and thoroughly and glibly emphasized speech that will fit every conceivable occasion in this life, fit it to a dot, and win success and applause every time. [Laughter.] Now I have completed a speech of that kind, and I have brought it along [laughter] to exhibit it here is an example. [Renewed merriment.]

We suppose that it is a granger gathering, and this man is suddenly called on; he comes up with some lively hesitancies and deferencies, repetitions, so as to give the idea that the speech is impromptu. Here, of course, after he has got used to delivering it, he can venture outside and make a genuine impromptu remark to start off with. For instance, if a distinguished person is present he can make a complimentary reference to him, say Mr. Depew. He could speak about his great talents or his clothes. [Laughter]. Such a thing gives him a sort of opening, and about the time that audience is getting to pity that man he opens his throttle valve and goes for those grangers. That person wants to be gorgeously eloquent; you want to fire the farmer's heart and start him from his mansard down to his cellar.

Now this man is called up, and he says: "I am called up suddenly, sir, and am indeed not, not prepared to—I was not expecting to be called up, sir, but I will, with what effect I may, add my shout to the jubilations of this spirited, stirring occasion. Agriculture, sir, is after all, the palladium of our economic liberties. [Laughter]. By it, approximately speaking, we may be said to live and move and have our being. All that we have been, all that we are, all that we hope to be, was, is and must continue to be, profoundly influenced by that sublimest of the mighty interests of man, thrice glorious agriculture. While we have life, while we have soul, and in that soul the sweet and hallowed sentiment of gratitude, let us with generous accord attune our voices to songs of praise, perennial outpourings of thanksgiving for that most precious boon, whereby we physically thrive and are made rich and strong, grand and aspiring, imbued with the mighty, far-reaching and all-embracing grace, and beauty, and purity and loveliness. The least of us knows, the least of us feels, the humblest among us will confess that, whereas—but the hour is late and I will not detain you." [Great laughter and applause.]

Now, then supposing a man with his cut-and-dried speech, that patent adjustable speech, as you may call it, finds himself at a granger gathering or a wedding breakfast, or a theological disturbance [great laughter], or a political blow out, an inquest, or funeral, or anywhere in the world you choose to mention, and be suddenly called up, all he has got to do is to change three or four words in that speech, and make his delivery anguishing and tearful, or chippy and facetious, or luridly and thunderously eloquent just as the occasion happens to call for, and just turp himself loose and he is all right [laughter], but I will illustrate, and instead of explanations I will deliver that speech itself just enough times to make you see the possibilities.

Now then, supposing that the occasion—I make one more illustration, so that you will always be perfectly safe, here or anywhere—supposing that this is an occasion of an inquest. This is a most elastic speech in a matter of that kind. Where there are grades of men you observe them. As a private funeral some of you want to be just as mournful as you can, but in the case where you didn't know the person, grade it accordingly. You want simply to be impressive. That is all. Now take a case half way between, about No. 4, somewhere about there, that is an inquest on a second cousin, a wealthy second cousin. [Great laughter.] He has remembered you in his will. [Laughter.] Of course all these thing count. [Laughter.] They all raise the grade a little, and—well, perhaps he hasn't remembered you. Perhaps he has left you a horse, an ordinary horse, a good enough horse, one that can go in about three minutes, or perhaps a pair of horses. It may have been one pair of horses at hand, not two pair or two pair and a jack. I don't know whether you understand that,—but there are people here. [Great laughter and applause.] Well, now then, this is a second cousin, and he knows all the circumstances. We will say that he has lost his life trying to save somebody from drowning. Well, he saved the mind-cure physician from drowning, or he tried to save him, but he didn't succeed. Of course he wouldn't succeed; of course you wouldn't want him to succeed in that way and plan. A person must have some experience and aplomb and all that before he can save anybody from drowning of the mind-cure. [Great laughter.] I am just making these explanations here. A person can get so glib in a delivery of this speech; why by the time he has delivered it fifteen or twenty times he could go to any intellectual gathering in Boston even, and he would draw like a prize fight. [Great laughter and applause.] Well, at the inquest of a second cousin under these circumstances, a man gets up with graded emotion, and he says:

"I am called up suddenly, sir (here Mr. Clements' voice trembled audibly and took a mournful and lugubrious accent), and am, indeed, not prepared. I was not expecting to be called up, sir, but I will, with what effect I may, add my shout—voice to the lamentations of this spirited, crushing grief. [Laughter] Death, death, sir, is, after all, the palladium of our spiritual liberties; by it, approximately speaking, we may be said to live and move and have ending. [Laughter.] All that we may be here, all that we are, all that we hope to be, was, is and must continue to be profoundly influenced by that sublimest interest of man, thrice sorrowful desolation. While we have life, while we have soul, and in that soul the sweet and hallowed sentiment of gratitude, let us with generous accord attune our voices to songs of peace, perennial outpourings of thanksgiving for that most potent boon by which we spiritually save, by which our otherwise sterile existence is made rich and strong, and is imbued with the mighty, far-reaching and all-embracing grace and beauty and loviness. The least of us knows, the least of us feels, the humblest among us (here Mr. Clements wept copiously) will confess we are (more tears); whereas—but the hour is late, and I will not detain you." [Great laughter and applause.]

NOT A BOOK AGENT.

Mr. H. Watson, Druggist, is not a book agent, but has the agency in Milton for Johnson's Tonic Bitters, which he can heartily recommend for any complaint to which a tonic medicine is applicable. This valuable medicine has been used with most astonishingly good results in cases of general debility, weakness, irregularities peculiar to females, extreme paleness, impoverishment of the blood, stomach and liver troubles, loss of appetite, and for that general worn out feeling that nearly every one is troubled with at some part of the year. Don't forget the name Johnson's Tonic Bitters 50c. and $1 per bottle at Watson's drug store.

The Mormons at Fort Macleod,

Mr. Macdonald, of Fort MacLeod, in an interview with a reporter of The Winnipeg Free Press, spoke well of the Mormon colony which was founded on Leo's Creek, twenty miles south of MacLeod, last June. The Mormons drove across the Continent from Utah last spring looking for the site of a colony and settled at Leo's Creek. Although it was late in the season when they arrived they went to work at once. They put up so much hay that they are now supplying the Mounted Police; and they were not there more than a few weeks before they had a thousand pounds of butter for sale. They brought cattle along with them, when they came. They made a road to the woods and have built themselves comfortable houses. They are very hard-working people, and the inhabitants of that section are ready to welcome as many more of them as will come. The men of the community are mainly American, while the women are British. All the Mormons is the settlement are monogamists; not one of them rejoices in the possession of a second spouse. They number about seventy, but as they are very well pleased with their location their number will doubtless receive many additions. Mr. Macdonald says that throughout the MacLeod district there is an almost unanimous desire for Commercial Union with the United States. The stock-growers recognize that they would fare much better could they deal in the Chicago markets instead of having to ship their cattle to Liverpool in order to sell them. In other respects too Commercial Union would be beneficial to the Northwest. With Free Trade between the two countries in products and railways, the Galt and other coal mines would find a market close to hand in the Western States. Helena and Butte are distant only a few hundred miles from Lethbridge, and an extension into those regions of the Galt railway, which would probably follow Commercial Union, would aid greatly in the development of the far west.

Johnson's All Healing White Ointment.

The wonderful healing and soothing properties of the above named excellent salve, have been found by many that have used it to be most efficacious in the treatment of salt rheum, pimples, blotches, boils, ulcers, scalds, burns, chafings, etc. One trial will be sufficient to prove that what we claim for it is correct. For sale at 25 cents per box by Watson's druggist.

The Five Largest Cities.

New York World.

The five cities of the world covering the greatest area would seem to be Philadelphia, 129; London, 118; New York, 41; New Orleans, 40; Chicago, 36 square miles. Paris covers only about 30 square miles.

"They have a larger sale in my district, says a well known druggist, "than any other pills on the market, and give the best satisfaction for sick headache, biliousness, indigestion, etc., and when combined with Johnson's Tonic Bitters, Johnson's Tonic Liver Pills will perform what no other medicine has done before for suffering humanity." Pills 25 cents per bottle. Bitters 50 cents and $1 per bottle. Sold by H. Watson, Druggist, Milton.

THE AWFUL VORTEX.

INTO WHICH THE UNTHINKING ARE RAPIDLY DRIFTING.

Off the western coast of Norway lies the little rocky island of Moskoene. It is inhabited by a few hardy fishermen who engage in the cod and herring fisheries along the coast.

It happened one day in the spring of 1837 that an old man and his grandson, a lad of ten or address years, put out from the island in a small boat, taking with them their fishing tackle and a lunch of dried fish and oaten cakes.

They row out some distance and secure a boat load of fish long before the returning tide will allow them to land, so they eat the frugal lunch and lie back on their oars to rest and wait. The old man, weary with pulling the heavy nets, is soon fast asleep, leaving the lad to look to the safety of the boat. For a time the sea is smooth, then a light wind blows from the west and the boat begins slowly but surely to drift. Little bubbles and patches of foam appear on the surface of the dark water. The breeze stiffens, and the boat, with steadily increasing speed, begins to move in an ever-narrowing circle. A sudden lurch alarms the boy, and at the same time awakens the grandfather, who seizes the oars and pulls with the strength of desperation against the now madly rushing waters; then the oars are wrenched from his hands, the doomed fishing boat is for a moment dashed about with terrible velocity, and disappears forever in the awful vortex of the great maelstrom.

It is the same with the blood. As it courses around through the veins, it reaches every part of the system, in its healthy rush, seeking an opportunity to discharge the waste and poisonous matter from every part of the system, into the natural sewers. This sewage matter is carried by the blood to the kidneys, there is to be thrown off, the same as in life the scavenger would throw his sewage into the stream to rid himself of the vile substance.

And the blood has no other place but the kidneys in which to throw off its waste matter. Sometimes it finds the kidneys unprepared to do this work. But the heart takes up the blood and again forces it through the system, where more waste matter is gathered up the same as the sewers of our cities gather up such poisonous matter, to be discharged at one grand point, and then be carried off.

Fancy the danger of such poisoned blood coursing for years through the body!

This process continues, the blood passing through the kidneys and heart, removing the impurities from 65 gallons of blood per hour, or 48 barrels each day!

Yet the unthinking practitioner regards the kidneys as of little importance, until they are stricken down, when he finds himself so far advanced in the vortex that there is but little chance for him. In such emergencies many have resorted to that great remedy, Warner's safe cure, to assist in putting these organs in a healthy condition. They have not rested on their oars, trusting their life idly in the hands of another when they can catch up the oars before it is too late, and a few strokes would put them safely beyond hopeless danger. A few bottles of Warner's safe cure at the proper time will restore the kidneys to health, thereby enabling them to rid the system of the poisonous uric acid, which is liable in its corruption to attack the weakest part of the system and thereby break it down just as the little stream at the mill-dam wears away the dam, increasing the danger each hour, until at length it becomes overtaxed and gives way, causing destruction to those who a short time before looked upon it as of so little importance, but now contemplate the result of their neglect with horror.

Bismarck's Probable Successor.

Cable special to N. Y. Sun.

Prince Bismarck is still at Friedrichsruhe, although rumor has summoned him to Berlin, and even to Vienna, a score of times since he returned to his favorite country seat, after the famous interview with the Czar at which the Orleanist plot was exploded. It has been vehemently asserted, too, that the man of iron is deteriorating mentally and physically, and that the time is not very far distant when, however reluctantly, he may be forced to lay aside the cares of state. Things are not quite so bad as that, but Prince Bismarck's health is gradually becoming worse, and sooner or later he will have become a chronic invalid. In these circumstances he has manfully looked the future in the face and has decided upon the man who shall best serve Germany when his own hands shall have dropped the reins of power. Count Hatzfeldt-Wilderburg, at present German ambassador in London, is the man. Count Hatzfeldt, as I saw him in London a few weeks ago, is little more than 50 years of age, tall, lean, with sharp cut features, close-cropped iron-gray hair, and clean shaven, save for a big gray mustache; a striking figure, one to command attention in any assembly. He is an early riser, of very frugal habits, and has, when he likes to exert himself, vast capacity for business. Shady in his morals, indifferent in regard to his pecuniary obligations, a staunch friend and good hater, and above all, passionate in devotion to the interests of Germany—such is the man whose opinion even Prince Bismarck is glad to ask, and who one day will almost certainly be chancellor of the German empire.

NEVER TRIED IT."

What! Never tried Johnson's Tonic Bitters! Then do so at once, it's positively the best general tonic on the market. I've often heard of it but thought that it was to be placed on the list of the many trashy preparations that flood our market, but since you recommend it so highly I'll give it a trial. Do so, it's good for any complaint in which a tonic is benefit, and can be taken by man, woman, or child, 50c. and $1 per bottle at H. Watson's drug store, Milton.

There Were Between Six and Seven.

Boston Herald.

It was in an Ohio town, in that part of the state where most of the boys are called Hans and the girls Gretchen. There was a case in court, and the particular question at issue just then was the number of people when a certain event occurred. An honest but simple-minded German was on the stand. He had never taken an oath before, and was not a little disconcerted. The lawyer who conducted the cross-examination saw his opportunity, and badgered him with questions after the manner of his kind. "How many did you say there were present?" he shouted, bringing his fist down upon the table as though the fate of empires were trembling in the balance. "Vell," meekly answered the witness, "off gourse I gould not chust say, but I dinks dere vhas between six and sefen." "Tell the jury what you mean by that," roared the lawyer, getting red in the face; "how could there be between six and seven? Were there six or were there seven?" and he glanced knowingly at the foreman. "Vell," answered the witness, "maybe I vas wrong. There was more as six, but dere vas not so much as sefen. One vas a fery leetle poy." He was released from further cross-examination.

The distressing paleness so often observed in young girls and women, is due in a great measure to a lack of the red corpuscles in the blood. To remedy this requires a medicine which produces these necessary little blood constituents, and the best yet discovered is Johnson's Tonic Bitters. Price 50 cts. and $1 per bottle. Sold at Watson's drug store, Milton.

What Some of Us Drink.

Chicago News.

Absinthe, the favorite intoxicant of the French, is almost always manufactured with alcohols of industry, illrectified, rendered green by the addition of sulphate of copper and saturated with resin, so as to give it the beautiful greenish-white precipitate produced by pouring water on it, and which drinkers so much admire. Vermouth, another favorite liquor, is adulterated with hydrochloric or sulphuric acid in order to give it a pungent taste. Kirsch is extracted from the leaves of the cherry-laurel and contains as much as twenty-two centigrams of prussic acid per litre, instead of five or six centigrams. Rum is manufactured always with alcohol distilled from beet root, to which is added ether and formic acid. The "bouquets" of brandies are manufactured by the action of sulphuric acid on castor oil. The coloring matters employed are extracted from logwood, the elder, sorrel, fuchsine, and coal. Such is the trash which is daily consumed by the Parisians.

James H. Gilmour, of T. Gilmour & Co., Wholesale Grocers, Brockville, says—I have used Tamarac Elixir for a severe cold and cough, which it immediately relieved and cured.

Christian "Temperance" Men at Loggerheads.

Spectator.

The Grit newspaper men of Bowmanville do not harmonize. The Sun and Statesman, both Grit, are having a tremendous row. Besides being Grit, the editors of both papers are professedly pious, and that fact does not tend to make the war and the less acrimonious. The Statesman has this to say of the other fellow:

A prominent public man remarked last week that "The placing of Mr. Climie on the list of speakers for the week of prayer would do more harm than all the town preachers can counteract in six months." How a man can "confess Christ anywhere," as he stated he could, and be guilty of publishing the deliberate lies that he has the past two weeks about a brother, is a difficult problem to enderstand.

The Christian Statesman seems to have its fellow worshipper of the Sun where the theological hair is short.
