ENGLAND'S YOUNGEST BRIDE.

The youngest bride who was ever led to the altar in England, so far as we can discover, was little Catherine Apsley, who had only seen four summers when she became the wife of Earl Bathurst, who was exactly double her age. The tiny ring worn by Catherine on this occasion, over two centuries ago, is still preserved. Lord Bathurst survived to see the 83rd anniversary of his wedding day, while his lady was a wife for 76 years.—London Chronicle.

FORMER MARKDALE MAN IS KILLED IN TORONTO.

James Lemon, a horse dealer of Weyburn, Sask., had a narrow escape from death about 11 o'clock Thursday night, in the Walker House, Toronto. He was crushed between the carriage of the passenger elevator and the wall at the third floor, and the prompt action of the elevator boy undoubtedly saved his life.

With a party of friends, Mr. Lemon had been to the theatre, and, although he was stopping at the Iroquois Hotel, accompanied them to the Walker House after the performance. All got off at the third floor, Mr. Lemon being last, and forgetting the risk he was running, jumped back into the elevator through the partly opened door. The operator had again started upwards, however, and managed to stop the carriage just before it reached the floor above.

Dr. Burt, of Owen Sound, was near at hand, and rendered first aid. Drs. Riordan and Rice were sent for, as well as the police ambulance, but it was afterwards found that Mr. Lemon's condition was not as serious as anticipated, and he remained at the hotel under the doctor's care. Mr. Lemon had only been in the city a few days, coming from the west to purchase a number of horses. His family is visiting in Markdale, his former home, where he has numerous relatives and friends.

Later reports tell of Mr. Lamon's death three hours afterward. The operator of the elevator has been exonerated from all blame.

THE BIRTH OE ICEBERGS

At its birth an iceberg will be at least a thousand feet in height, as well as in length and breadth. The icebergs are discharged from the fiords in large numbers, and are eventually carried by the current of Baffin's Bay and Davis Strait into the Atlantic.

The icebergs are alike the grandest and most beautiful features of the Greenland coasts. Only one-seventh of their bulk appears above water, yet, they are hundreds of yards in circumference, while their peaks reach a height of 300 feet and more. I measured one 372 feet high.

A grander sight can scarcely be conceived than new-born icebergs drifting out from the ice fiords of their birthplace. On one occasion I crossed the strait, called the Waigat, between the Island of Disco and the mainland of Greenland, to see the fossil formation at Atanikerdluke. We sailed across against a foul wind in one of Jacko Hall's lifeboat cutters. It came on to blow hard, and threatening dark clouds were banking up over the Disco mountains. The scene was indescribably grand and wild. A perfect army of icebergs were drifting away from their discharging glacier, some of them of great height, peering up through the wild scud and mist, while ahead a gleam of sunshine here and there brought out a peak of the Disco range in bold relief.

The wind was freshening, with squalls of rain, and it was time to be off. We hoisted a close-reefed foresail and seudded before the squalls at a furious pace, now and then almost becalmed under the lee of a berg. The boat behaved splendidly, breasting and dashing through the waves, while the wild spray curled round us and flew from the bows. The spray also dashed wildly over the icebergs, which were rapidly drifting down the Waigat, "calves" cracking off with wild reports, rising and falling on the waves. It was no easy work to steer clear of them, so thickly were they crowded together. Once a shift of wind in a squall, took us aback, and we just scraped the icewall of the berg. It was a glorious sight, the drifting of the icebergs from their discharging glacier in wild weather.

When the icebergs drift well out into the open sea, the weathering and consequent reduction of size begin. They eventually lose their equilibrium and capsize. The part that had been long worn under water becomes the upper part. It is then that icebergs assume the most fantastic shapes. Very often a large piece of ice breaks off from the parent berg, and falls into the sea, churning it up into creamy waves. This is called "calving."

The color of an iceberg is opaque white, like hand-pressed snow. Scattered through the mass and sometimes visible on the surface, are strata of deep blue ice, varying in width from one to several feet. They have an exquisitely lovely effect, contrasting with the dead white of the rest of the berg. These blue stripes may be formed by a filling up of the fissures, in the inland ice, with water. Such refrigeration of the water in the fissures may be an important agent in setting these great mountains of ice in motion.

Sometimes there is a passage right through an iceberg. One day in June, the sea transparent and a fine ultramarine, we pulled slowly under such an arched passage in the dinghy. Fancy an immense arch of 80 feet span and 50 feet high, formed of solid ice of a beautiful emerald green, its surface of a shining smoothness, and you may form some idea of the architectural beauties of this ice temple, the wonderful workmanship of time and the elements. When we had rowed half-way through it was seen that the berg was rent directly over our heads, exhibiting two vertical sections of irregular surfaces—deeply, beautifully—while here and there it was illumined by an Arctic sun which darted its golden rays between.

The eyes were riveted on the beautiful scene, when the fracture was observed to close, and then slowly open.

We were awakened from a delightful dream to a terrible reality. The immense body of the ice was about to lose its equilibrium and turn over—with us inside! As if by instinct we gave way, and the little boat swiftly glided beyond the reach of danger. The same evening the iceberg turned over with a noise like thunder.—Sir Clements R. Markham, K.C.B., in The English Race

CLEAN SEED PAYS BEST.

Speaking on the cleaning of seed at the meeting of the Glenelg Centre Farmers' Club., on the evening of February 3rd, President Binnie advocated the cleaning of seed grain as often as possible before sowing. It does not pay to sow weeds or small grains for the weeds will not make good feed, and the small grains will not produce the grain even if they will produce straw. It is also well to test the grain for germination before sowing as this year there was so much of the grain that was burnt in the mow or in the bin. He also spoke on advertising the county and showed by figures that it has paid other counties in Ontario to advertise, and it should pay Grey county. It will bring in new farmers, and they will improve the farms that are now standing idle. This will assist in making these farms pay their just share of taxes, as they are not doing at present.

Songs were sung by Wm. Connelly and T. H. Binnie. The next meeting will be held on February 25th, when the ladies will not be peesent. Mr. John Weir will speak on "The Best Breed of Cattle for This Locality," and a talk on breeding will follow. All men not coming will miss the time of their lives.

SWIPED CHICKENS.—ARE NOW IN GUELPH JAIL

For years back, fowl fanciers in Harriston have repeatedly had their chicken pens raided, and no trace of the thieves was ever found On Wednesday of last week the chicken pen of Benjamin Dalley was entered, and six valuable fowls were taken Footprints, and traces of blood and feathers on the snow led to the homes of Wm Ferguson, electrician, and Henry Brown, laborer, where some of the fowl were found. These men appeared before magistrate Brisbin and the mayor, charged with the theft of the fowl. Sufficient evidence was given to warrant their committal to Guelph jail to await trial before the county judge. Both of the accused men recently returned home after serving three months in the Central Prison for stealing merchandise from a bonded car at the Grand Trunk station. Since returning home, the citizens have given these men every encouragement to reform, and they were reinstated in their former positions. —Mt. Forest Confederate.

WHAT FATIGUE IS.

Fatigue lowers all the faculties of the body.

It puts a chasm between seeing and acting.

It makes a break, somehow, between the messages that come into the brain from the outside world and the messages that go out.

It destroys will power. Fatigue is a destructive agent, like sickness and death.

It is a condition which in the nature of things we cannot avoid.

But it is important to know how to deal with it if we wish to keep away from the important blunders.

The only thing to do with fatigue is to get rid of it as soon as possible.

Important questions must not be decided when one is fatigued.
