THE DEADLY LITTLE GERM

SOMETHING ABOUT THE GREAT TUBERCULOUS SCOURGE.

Responsibility of Governments to Stamp Out the Disease—Royal Family of Europe Interested—Statistics Showing the Widespread Effects of Phthisis.

The great interest taken by the Prussian family in the recent congress at Berlin for the prevention of tuberculosis, and the message which Queen Victoria sent to it expressing her warm approval and blessing, have been referred to by European correspondents as striking proof of the attention now given to disease problems. But it would be strange indeed if, after the revelations which have been made in recent years regarding the ravages of the deadly tubercle bacilus, sovereigns did not take an interest in the war that medical men have declared against it.

If by the invasion of some savage horde more than 70,000 men, women and children were killed in one year in Great Britain alone, it would be considered the paramount duty of the

QUEEN AND PARLIAMENT

to give every minute of their time to the extermination of the invaders; all the more if it were certain that the same number would be killed every year following by the same enemy. Why, then, should not some attention be given to the enemy that slays those 70,000, even though that enemy be invisible and so small that hundreds of him could find place on the point of a needle? Germany has at present about 1,300,000 sufferers from phthisis, according to the estimate of Prof. Leyden, and 170,000 die annually from this disease. In fifteen years the United States lost over 2,000,000 by tuberculous diseases; and from

for years it is known that one person in every seven or eight dies in America and Europe, of tuberculosis, a preventable disease.

No doubt the main cause of the popular indifference toward so deadly a disease lies in a sort of fatalism due to the ignorance that has prevailed until recently as to its origin. The doctors themselves groped in the dark, grappling with an unknown enemy, and trying to find its origin in inflammation of the lungs, hereditary tendencies, or climatic conditions. Consequently all their strategy and tactics were unavailing until 1882, when Dr. Koch discovered the enemy and brought him to bay. The bacillus first described by him is now accepted by medical authorities the world over as the sole cause of the

in the various forms that affect different parts of the body. It is a microscopic organism—a vegetable parasite—so minute and light that it finds lodgment in dust and floats in the air which is taken into the lungs; or it may get into the alimentary canal with food and drink, infecting the stomach, kidneys, intestines, etc. There it begins a war with the cells, which, in healthy individuals, usually succeed in overcoming the invaders, unless they are introduced in too great numbers or too persistently; while in persons whose vitality is low the imported microbes gain the ascendancy, multiply, form tubercles, or "pinhead" nodules, set up caseous degeneration, and thus gradually lead to a fatal issue, unless remedial measures succeed in

CHECKING THE RAVAGES.

Innumerable experiments, tests, and observations have proved the correctness of Koch's theory. The startling discovery was soon made that man's most useful animal, the cow, is also his most deadly enemy. It has been estimated that there are at present half a million cows in England tainted with tuberculosis, and as much as 17 per cent. of the milk has been found infected. In the Queen's own herd, on her home farm at Windsor — forty cows, all apparently healthy—it has been discovered lately, as the Lancet informs us, that only five were healthy. The others reacted to the tuberculin test, in which, fortunately, has been secured of distinguishing diseased from healthy animals, the tests made with tuberculin in Europe, America and Australia having shown that cattle reacting to it were almost invariably found, on being slaughtered, to have tuberculosis. The Queen now has a new herd of healthy animals. A few days ago the Governor of Illinois witnessed the slaughter of twenty-seven cows that had been supplying the Executive mansion with dairy products. He is reported to have said he would not eat any more beef. Luckily such a radical pledge is entirely uncalled for, as cooking destroys the bacilli in the meat. As for the milk, that can be sterilized by being subjected to a high temperature; but many persons greatly prefer unboiled milk, while cream, cheese and butter, of course, cannot be boiled; it is, therefore, a necessary part of the war against tuberculosis, that all should be destroyed.

A SURE METHOD

Much greater, however, than the danger from cows is the danger from dust, as may be inferred from the fact that in the total of 80,943 deaths from all causes in London during 1897, there were 10,984 fatal cases of tuberculous disease, and of these 10,984 cases, 7,864 were put down to phthisis, or tuberculosis of the lungs, commonly known as pulmonary consumption. This pulmonary form of the disease is caused by breathing into the lungs air laden with dust particles with which tubercle bacilli are mixed. These bacilli get into the dust from the dried sputa of consumptives. A single person can cough up in one day many millions of these fatal bacilli, and, were it not for the fact that are their deadly enemy, it is probable that man would have succumbed to them long ago. The discovery of such a powerful and insidious enemy of the human race is certainly one of the most sensational incidents in the history of that race; yet there is no cause for alarm; on the contrary, Koch's discovery has placed the remedy—or rather the prevention—of the disease so completely within our power, that if the public will co-operate with the medical men, it will be possible, in a generation or two, to make tuberculosis as rare in Europe and America as typhus fever and leprosy are now; and that, too, without of compelling families to send patients to hospitals for contagious diseases.

All that is necessary to do is to carefully collect and disinfect all expectorations, never allowing them to dry on linen, or on the floor, or in the street. This will prevent the spread of the disease, and, in the meantime, those who are liable to it should make themselves immune by the free use of the cheapest of all tonics—fresh air. Sir William Broadbent has expressed his belief that "if we all slept with open windows, the mortality from consumption would be reduced by one-half from this along." The papers read and discussed at recent medical congresses have emphasized more and more the fresh air treatment as the best of remedies, and Germany has recenty establlished more than twenty open-air sanatorias for phthisis patients.

Blood Poisoning.

TERRIBLE SUFFERING OF A PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY FARMER.

Hospital Treatment Failed to Benefit Him and His Life Was Despaired Of—Again Well and Strong.

From the Belleville Sun.

A reporter of the Belleville Sun recently had an opportunity to investigate a cure made through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People which is little short of miraculous. The subject of the cure is Mr. William H. Conklin, a well known farmer who lives in Ameliasburg township, Prince Edward county. When the reporter drove over to see Mr. Conklin he was under the impression, from what he had heard of the case, that he would find a partial invalid, but to his surprise found a stalwart, robust man of six feet, actively engaged unloading logs from a sleigh. On making known the object of his visit the reporter was invited into the house and Mr. Conklin gave his story as follows:—

You can see for yourself that my condition is now one of good health, and yet I have been near death's door. A year ago last summer I injured my hand, with the result that blood poisoning set in. A doctor was called in and the usual treatment given and the hand apparently got well and I started to work. It soon turned out, however, that the poison had not been entirely got rid of and it spread through my whole system. The doctor was again called in, but looking upon my case as critical, advised me to go to the hospital at Belleville. This I did and remained there throughout the month of October, 1897. My condition was desperate, and as I was not making any progress toward recovery. I may frankly say that I gave my case up as hopeless. Believing that I could not recover, I asked to be taken home. I then tried various treatments with no better results. I could not walk without help, and I was doubled up like a jack-knife. At this stage I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and sent for half a dozen boxes. After using the first half dozen my appetite returned and night sweats which had been the bane of my sleeping hours deserted me. Knowing that the pills were helping me I sent for a further supply. Meantime a swelling came in my hip, which finally broke, and from that on my progress was more rapid and I am again as sound as ever, and able to do a day's work with any one. I can only add that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills brought me to my present state of good health and so long as I live I shall praise the remedy that brought me back from the verge of the grave.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure by going to the root of the disease. They renew and build up the blood, and strengthen the nerves, thus driving disease from the system. Avoid imitations by insisting that every box you purchase is enclosed in a wrapper bearing the full trade mark, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. If your dealer does not keep them they will be sent postpaid at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

STAYED THE UPLIFTED HAND.

The old man was about to bring the shingle down where it would do the most good when the boy interrupted to make one last plea.

You've always said, father, he urged, that your school days were the happiest memories of your life.

Quite true, admitted the man.

And when I've heard you recalling those memories with some of your old cronies, persisted the boy, you've always dwelt especially on scrapes you were in and the tricks you played upon your teachers.

Um, yes; maybe so. What of it?

Well, I haven't been doing a thing but store up pleasant memories for my old age.

And the shingle's fall was stayed.

LONGEST BEARD IN THE WORLD.

Probably the longest beard in the world is that of a metal worker in Marseilles. The man is 74 years old. When 14 years of age he had a beard six inches long. It grew from year to year, and now his hirsute attachment, when unrolled, reaches the respectable length of 10 feet 10 inches. When this man goes out walking he carries his beard rolled up in a big skein under the arm. Since he is rather small in size, measuring but five feet three inches, the beard is more than twice the man's height.

BRITISH CAVALRY HORSES

JOHN BULL IS PREPARED FOR A CONTINENTAL WAR.

Cavalrymen Would Cross the Channel and Find Mounts Awaiting Them in Holland—The Delay in Shipping Animals Would Be Avoided, and Only Men Would Have to Be Transported.

Considering that a British army corps requires 6,000 animals, it seems strange that there is a never-failing supply, and that they are capable of having no small amount of military tactics. Equine recruiting forms almost a business in itself, and a certain department of the War Office is given over for this purpose alone. The men employed to buy the mounts have become thoroughly efficient in their work through long study of horses, and, although they are sometimes swindled by fraudulent dealers, who have faked the animals they sell. for the most part they are keen judges, and secure excellent value for the Government. Each horse for the light cavalry costs about $150 to buy in the initial stage, but those used in the Guards cannot be purchased for much less than $250, and the perfectly black animals ridden in the Life Guards cost $300. For the most part these come from Ireland, and there are a number of dealers in the Emerald Isle who make a living solely through breeding horses for the Government. The prices seem at first enormous, considering the number of beasts required. The inestimable importance of mounting the most insignificant trooper upon the best equine to be had makes clear the policy of paying the best prices for the best beasts.

SYSTEM OF EARLY TRAINING.

The training of the horse after it has once been purchased occupies a period extending over three or four months. It has first to go through the riding school, and is there taught the use of saddle and rein by rough riders—men who have done nothing but train horses all their lives. Colored flags, newspapers and other bright objects are waved near the animal's head until it becomes thoroughly used to them, and will not allow itself to be frightened in any way.

This tuition over, riding in line follows. As a rule scarcely any difficulty is experienced here, the animal undergoing training being led by the others. Then it is that the horse gets some idea of drill, and it is a recognized fact that it will, in all probability, learn its drill quicker than a man, and also know the meaning of the bugle calls better than its rider does.

The most trying part of all comes when the horse has to make its first acquaintance with fire. However easy it has been to train up to this point, every quadruped becomes frightened when rifles begin to go off in the vicinity. One plan adopted is to strap the animal down to a plank and fire revolver shots near its head, accompanied by the rattle of tins and the clashing of arms generally.

SIX YEARS' ACTUAL USEFULNESS

After a few weeks of this training the result becomes apparent, and shots can be fired with impunity near the horse's ear, and it will do little more than start. Then it is fit to be ridden in line under fire, and a month of such practice closes its military education. The rest is easy enough, and a thorough knowledge of drill will come in time. The age of a horse when it is purchased for military purposes is about 5 years, and it is able to carry besides its living burden some six stone of accouterments. The period of service varies according to the work it has to do and the climate in which it is situated. In India horses wear out quicker than they do here, because of the hardness of the ground, but on home service from nine to ten years' work can be got out of a good steed. Six to seven years' completes the animal's actual service, for after this time it is sent to the depot and employed for various purposes. When it reaches the ripe age of 13 it is considered no longer fit for use, so is sold into civil life again.

VALUE TO AN INVADER.

One of the greatest problems in cavalry service is the difficulty to transport the mount any distance over the seas. If, next to artillery, there is any one aid that an army invading a populous district absolutely cannot do without, it is a large and efficient force of cavalry. A cloud of encircling outriders are inestimably valuable for a number of reasons. They eat up the country and terrorize the natives into submission or neutrality. They act like a cloud of obscuring flies, shielding the numbers and disposition alike from all observation. And best of all, they are a great factor in intercepting and dispersing those small bands of militia which go to make up the major part of the army of an invaded nation, and which, if concentrated, might constitute an overwhelming force.

REMOUNTS ON THE CONTINENT.

To the end that at any time, at almost daily notice, a British army of invasion might be launched at France or Germany, a large store of remounts sufficient to supply the pick of the British cavalry, is kept at Hamburg. The expense, of course, is enormous, but the necessity amply justifies it. The secret of England's greatness lies in the fact that she never does anthing by half. At a modest computation there must be 30,000 cavalry horses in England and 20,000 on the continent. The cost of these, on an average of $225, is about $6,750,000. Their yearly keep would average, with trainers, stable and food $2,000,000 more. Yet, if, as is never improbable, necessity for their use should arise, the wisdom of the expenditure, cannot but be felt. No Power in the world can at present take England by surprise, while, should she chose to disregard the formality of a declaration of war, her cuirassiers might trample the grass in the Champs Elysee before the French were aware that hostilities had broken out.

AESTHETIC CURL PAPERS.

Woman has at last found a way out of the difficulty of making a fright of herself with curl papers. Doing up one's hair on retiring has always been a perplexing problem to those who eschew hot irons, for even in the sanctity of isolation one does not like to feel herself a fright.

With a due knowledge of feminine caprice, some enterprising manufacturer has sent out a curl paper which ties around the desired curl with a dainty bow of ribbon, so that when the bang or pompadour is arranged for the night, the head looks as if surrounded by a halo of pretty ribbons and floating ends.

Half the horrors of a fire in an apartment house are thus done away with, the harrowing sight of curl papers has always added to the others tertors in no small degree; sleep walking can now be as graceful as a scene from "Macbeth," to say nothing of one's own feeling in being well dressed—in curl papers—which is said to give the crowning touch to woman's self-possession. Truly, the manufacturer of ribboned curl papers should be canonized if there is any gratitude in the feminine breast.
