Railway Notes.

Since our last issue, the village of Shelburne has carried a bonus of $3,500 for the scheme of widening the T. G. & B. R. and putting it under Grand Trunk management. Owing to the defeat in Derby, and the fact that the promoters have so many municipalities in the western branch and lower end to attend to that they cannot give attention enough to townships here to fairly lay their scheme before the people, it has been decided to withdraw the by-laws now before Sullivan, Sydenham, Sarawak and the other municipalities in this vicinity, so that the voting will not take place on the days announced. We understand that if the Legislature can be got to postpone the time for the new law about voting taking effect, by-laws will be submitted again when there will be time to thoroughly discuss the merits of the scheme with the people of the townships.

The session of the Legislature drawing near, there is a "hum" amongst railway men as usual. The Stratford & Huron people are marshalling their forces for a big push to obtain from the Government the aid they refused last year; the Georgian Bay & Wellington will be pressing its claim again; while the Toronto, Grey & Bruce will also endeavor to make Mr. Mowat come down handsomely; and no doubt other projects will be on hand asking for aid. In addition to the efforts which be made by the various companies to get the Government to promise aid, a very large number of notices of special legislation have been given. The Toronto, Grey & Bruce is asking for power to re-arrange bonded debt, to make the proposed arrangement with the Grand Trunk, and for other purposes; power is being sought to amalgamate the Port Dover & Lake Huron, the Stratford & Huron and the Georgian Bay & Wellington, and to extend the time named for completion in the several by-laws; the Midland Railway is asking for various powers; the Grand Junction seeks several amendments to its charter; the Credit Valley is on hand as usual for more legislation; new charter are being asked for another railway between Port Royal and the Detroit River, for an Elevated Railroad in Toronto, connecting with Grand Trunk at Weston and Duffin's Creek, from a line from Jarvis in Haldimand to Simcoe in Norfolk, for a line from Ingersoll to St. Thomas, for a line from St. Catherines to Caledonia, with branches; and further legislation is also asked by the Yorkville Loop-line, the Erie & Huron, the Port Rowan & Lake Shore, and a number of other companies. It is evident that the coming session will see some exciting struggles in the Railway Committee.—Owen Sound Times.

Winter Scenes.

How lovely it is to look upon the grassy meadows moving before the summer wind, and listen to the bobolink as she rises on merry wing and song from its verdant bosom—to gaze on the summer flowers, and listen to the bees at work, to hear the cheery and musical notes of the robin redbreast, as he sings his morning songs from the top of some neighboring tree. How delightful it is to turn the eye upon the glorious rainbow after the summer shower, and hear the thrush trill forth in unison from bending thern his song of praise. All this, together with the beauteous verdancy of summer, produce an enchantment indescribable. And, too, when the golden tints of autumn appear, and nature is arrayed in its variable garb of beauty, our admiration is then excited and we feel as enraptured with the scene as did the poet when he said:

'Tis sweetly sad, 'tis sadly sweet,
To gaze upon this solemn scene;
Nor would I, if I could retreat,
Where naught vernal bloom is seen.

Although summer and autumn have their many beauties and enchantments, yet winter, when seemingly all nature is dead although it is but fast asleep, hath for us its charms. I am now gazing through the window into the sky, and the big snowflakes are falling thick and fast around. How beautiful it looks. Those flakes of pureness are from the distant clouds, and they come dancing in whirling beauty and fall as gently as sleep upon the infant. All above is dark save these thousands of little feathery things that fill the air. The evergreen trees—as the cedar, hemlock and pines—are laden with a burden of snow. what a contrast between the greenness of their foilage and the whiteness of their gentle covering. The scene is beautiful, picturesque and solemn. Their verdant boughs kiss the snowy earth, and create a thousand wintry arbors in which faries might dance their little jigs by moonlight. But this calm and transporting sight is only, as it were, momentary; for, hark! the stillness is already broken. The angry wind has arisen, and takes the silent forest, hung in snowy coverlet, by the head, and shakes away its hoary locks. Wild and grand it is then to listen to the the rustling forest's boughs, the raging wind, and to behold the hurricane of drifting snow. All is still again. The howls of the god of of storms—the spirit of rude Boreas—has ceased. The sun shines out on the ocean of snow, glittering along its hardened surface in ten millions of sparkling points, the air cells made by madame frost. Although the voice of the furious blast is dreary and solemn, I hear in it music dear to the soul,

There's music in the wailing winds,
That stir the slumb'ring night;
And shake the sea-foam from the locks
Of mermaid's dancing light.

To me there is also music in the "jingling of the tinkling of the bells," as their notes with those of the crackling frost "fill the icy air of night." Hath not winter then its beauties and charms as well as summer?

Colliery Explosion in Wales.

Cardiff, Dec. 10.—A great explosion took place this morning at Penygraig, the new colliery in Rhondda Valley. It is believed that 87 persons perished. The explorers discovered 16 corpses. The search was impeded by after damp and debris in the pit. About a mile from this scene a great explosion in the Dinas Colliery took place in 1878.

LONDON, Dec. 10.—An explosion in the Penygraig Colliery occurred at 1.40 this morning, The shock was felt for miles around. The damage was so great that the explorers were unable to descend into the mine for hours. One shaft was choked. There is not the slightest hope of saving any of the eighty men and eighteen horses still in the pit. Four men were brought up alive.

The most intense excitement prevails throughout the district. All approaches to the colliery are thronged with waiting men, women and children. The cries of the people whose relatives were imprisoned in the colliery were heartrending.

London, Dec. 11.—Twenty-two bodies have been recovered so far, and thirty-four more have been seen in the Pen-y-Graigh Pit.

In his late circular, Mr. W. J. Spicer, superintendant of the G. T. R., earnestly recommends the employees to renew their pledges of total abstinence from strong drink. He says to the men:—"We know the habitual use of stimulants too often leads to access; inexcusable neglect and careless performance of duty follow; and then sooner or later loss of position and employment is and must be the inevitable result. The unpleasant position is then fully realized, and most pressing appeals are made for re-employment—one more chance for the sake of an anxious wife and the children, who are always the greatest suffers in such cases. Indulgence in such s imulants do no good at any time; it is an expensive habit, a positive waste of money.". The circular also sets forth that the employees have the lives of the public and the safety of property entrusted to their care, requiring the utmost possible caution and vigilance in the performance of their duty. In conclusion he says:—"Believe me, it is the right thing to do, a very safe step to take. We can guarantee that the results will be in every way beneficial, both financially and physically, and I do trust that we shall have considerable assession to our number of total abstainers for the year 1881."

Croup can be cured in five minutes by the combined use of Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam and Yellow Oil. Indeed, Yellow Oil is in itself a specific used internally and applied outwardly; but to heal and strengthen the lungs the Pectoral Balsam may be used with great success. Both of these matchless remedies should be kept in every house. To be obtained of all dealers in medicine.—b148.
