TALKING OF FISH.

The Agricultural Writer In Good Luck.

As we were ruminating on the sad condition of the fish editor, whose high ideals of honesty and integrity had been dashed by the contemptuous words of a Peterboro Examiner scribe, the telephone rang and the agricultural editor got word that there was a fish for him at the express office and that to prevent it spoiling it had been sent to a fish depository until advice was received as to its disposal. The fish editor was on his holidays, and had not forgotten his fellows fishing on dry land for suckers and chubs.

At the fish house we found a long box, looking like a coffin. It was labelled in real journalistic fashion. The agriculturist sent the "baby" to a friend for examination. He wrote that it might be a "cod," but that the contents be turned out and if it was a joke to keep quiet. In the evening the friend was met; she was jubilant, if weary and out of breath. She said: "It was no joke; I clubbed it about the yard and it's dead now."

The fish editor said the creature, weighing more pounds than the agricultural writer had teeth, had been taken below Rockport, and was a fair specimen of the maskinonge that float in the waters of the St. Lawrence. He said he had taken it "with his own hand." This made us suspicious for it must have been in a faint to allow such an easy task. Fish are not often caught by one's own hand. We looked the fish over and found it firm and wholesome. But the most remarkable story was in the fish's mouth. The fisherman had put it there. He wrote:

"You remember I wrote about a surprised young man at Rock Point, who caught a schrimp, threw the line in again, in disgust, and pulled a monster to the top of the water, only to find when the line came swinging to land the measly little schrimp was on it. The big fish had swallowed the little one, but let go before the fisher could land it. Strange to say the fish I send you is that one. The schrimp my friend caught was minus a fin; this fin I found stuck in the mouth of the maskinonge. The evidence seems conclusive."

We have no reason to doubt the fish editor's truthfulness. However, as to the fish it was solid, substantial and salsuginous, the work of the cook, who made it a tempting palatable dish. If improvement is noted in the Whig's articles it will be due to the prolonged fish diet.

HANDSOME STREET COSTUME

The Gown is Trimmed With Applique Taffeta.

A very handsome street costume made of blue cloth is shown below. The blouse waist is tucked, with slightly overlapping front and opens over a chemisette of white chiffon. The blouse sleeve is also tucked and between the tucks is a trimming of applique taffeta of graduated size framed with crochet rings worked with dark blue Corticelli crochet silk. A similar garniture appears on the panel front of the skirt, the latter being completed with a corded flounce and above the flounce at the sides are more lengthwise tucks.

Picturesque effects are the rule and are in evidence on all sides; and flowered mousselines and gorgeously flowered parasols greet the eye everywhere. In fancy, at least, the pages of fashion have turned backward to the flower designs once so much in vogue. On the whole the trend of dress at the moment is toward greater elegance reaching out in all directions. The dainty mousselines in small patterns with wide and narrow borders of large flowers are in great demand.

Crowds Want To See.

London, Aug. 15.—The plan of opening Westminster Abbey to give the public an opportunity of witnessing the coronation fittings, has involved the authorities immeasurably and is proving to be a much more troublesome task than had been imagined. The people passed through the turnstiles at the rate of 2,500 an hour. Although thousands turned away, giving up hope of entering the line was still growing up to the middle of the afternoon.

No More Operations.

London, Aug. 15.—The British Medical Journal makes the announcement that it is authorized to say there is no truth whatever in the recent rumors that King Edward will undergo a second operation. The British Medical Journal declares that the king's recovery is complete, and that his general health is better than for a long time past.

Much Money Found.

London, Aug. 15.—The annual report of the postmaster-general shows that the large total of $3,375,000 was found in letters undelivered during the past year. The undelivered letters totalled no less than 10,000,000, while the delivered letters amounted to 1,451,500,000, an average of 58.9 for each person in the united kingdom.

CHILD ENTITLED TO SHARE

A DECISION RENDERED BY JUSTICE LOUNT.

An Unborn Child Can Share in Its Father's Estate—An Application to the Court By a Trust Company.

Toronto, Aug. 15.—Justice Lount, to-day, rendered a judgment which deals with the question of the right of a child, unborn at the time of the death of the father, to share in the parents' estate. The Trust and Guarantee Co., as guardians of the estate, and four children of the late William H. Lethbridge, of Southwold township, Elgin county, applied for advice as to whether one of the children which had been born after the death of the father was entitled to share in the insurance money. Judge Lount decided that the child should have a share in the money.

MONARCHS OF THE SNOWS.

The Scene Is One Of Ravishing Entrancement.

By an English Banker.

Amongst the many transcendant beauties which abound in such lavish profusion upon this earth of ours, one of the most striking and attractive is the lovely after-glow which, some little time after the sun has set in the valleys, lights up the lofty upreared summits of the snow-covered giants of the Alps and other high mountain ranges. Standing, shortly before sunset, upon the ledge of rocks which overlooks the wonderful Mer-de-glace, a veritable sea of ice proceeding from the higher ranges of that mighty snow-clad monarch, Mont Blanc, in a curving course down the valley beneath, the scene is one of ravishing entrancement.

Immediately below is the weird frozen sea, ever slowly replenished as its base melts away, its features always varying in form. Here is a chaos of gracefully shaped pinnacles of pure ice, some pointing upwards to the sky some arranged at different angles, while others are clustered together as for mutual support. Here an embrasured battlement, a pillared terrace, or a high beetling cliff of solid ice. Here a very chaos reigns supreme; huge frozen blocks piled up like Pelion upon Ossa; some shattered into fragments, some apparently suspended almost on thin air soon to plunge down with the roar of an avalanche, while others are cleft in twain as though divided by the axe of some herculean giant.

And here, at a spot where, a thousand feet or more below the surface is probably a projecting ridge of rock, the frozen glacier is rent and torn as by an earthquake. Vast yawning chasms of terrific depth, cleft in the translucent ice; abysms tinted in the loveliest of ever-deepening sea-green hues, open wide their icy gorges; fairy ravines, lovely, but awe inspiring.

But the shadows of evening are fast gathering around; the ice columns appear like pale phantasms, the fancy conjures up strange forms in the distorted ice clusters below, and the darkening shades are casting their gloom over the valleys beneath. But suddenly the summits of the snowy peaks and cones of the great Alp monarch towering high above are lighted up by the sunken orb of day in a very flood of glory. First a lovely rose-pink, ever deepening into still more startling hues until they shine in a vivid lustre of deep carmine. And as the great luminary sinks yet lower and lower the carmine has changed to subdued mauve or violet, until at length the mountain tops are merged into the gathering gloom of the night sky.

But with ourselves the conditions are reversed. For as we pass through the ever-darkening valley of the shadow, if we grasp tightly the hand of Him who endured far worse horror in that dread valley than any mortal man—for He, the sinless One, was oppressed with the loathsomeness of the sins of others, which He was bearing—we shall suddenly emerge into the glory. But if He is not our Friend, there remaineth but the Darkness!

STRANGE STURGEON STORY.

Peculiar Experience With a Monster of the Deep.

As wonderful a fish story as ever was reported in this section comes from Hopkins Point, on the St. Lawrence below Massena.

Last Wednesday while Ira Russell and Miss Helen Plumb were out trolling and about three-fourths of a mile from shore, a large sturgeon suddenly jumped into their boat, frightening the occupants and nearly capsizing the skiff. The craft being an extremely light one without ribs, cracked under the weight of the big fish which floundered from one end of the boat to the other.

Mr. Russell in trying to kill the fish with one of the oars accidentally broke a hole through the side of the boat through which the water ran in rapidly. Their only salvation then was to reach shore before the craft would sink. They had nothing with them with which to bail out the water, not even a hat or box. Miss Plumb showed wonderful presence of mind by at once removing one of her shoes, and worked vigorously bailing out the water, while Mr. Russell exerted his every effort to reach land, which they did just as the boat filled and was about to sink.

Miss Plumb was very wet and much exhausted, but soon revived.

The sturgeon measured four feet, six inches long and weighed forty-four pounds.

Strain and Anxiety Too Much for Her.

Health Broke Down, Was Pale and Exhausted — Restoration Came With the Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

The case described in this letter is similar to thousands in which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is successfully used. It is one more example of the marvellous upbuilding effect of this great food cure.

Mrs. George Campbell, Upper Harbor, St. John County, N.B., writes: "Last summer my system was completely run down, and I was pale, weak and exhausted. I had taken care of a sick friend for four months, and loss of sleep as well as the strain and anxiety, was too much for me. When I would lie down or sit down the nerves in my legs would twitch, and I felt strange sensations in the joints.

"When in this condition I heard of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and began to use it. It seemed to help me from the very first, and gradually restored me to health and strength. To-day I feel as well as I ever did, and give the credit to this great prescription of Dr. Chase."
