"The Perfect Food"

There's nothing else like it. Nothing so good. Nothing that can take its place. Mixed with pure barley malt extract, the cooked whole wheat is rolled into little wafer flakes—every grain of wheat a flake—then baked in great, clean ovens till it's crisp and brown, "done to a turn", the most delicious, the most healthful food in the world. And that's the way it comes to you in sealed, air-tight, dirt-proof packages. All grocers. Now 10 cents.

"AN EXCELLENT FOOD, admirably adapted to the Wants of Infants."

TURKEY RAISING.

Principles That Have Been Followed With Success.

The frequent questions about diseased turkeys indicate that many persons who attempt to raise them have a very imperfect knowledge of right methods. Hundreds of keepers rarely have an ailing bird, because they are handled in a natural and cleanly manner. One of these is James Anderson of Guelph, whose forty-one years' experience in turkey-raising enables him to offer suggestions that are valuable.

In choosing for breeding purposes I prefer a two-year-old hen to a younger one, and the same age for the gobbler. You have stronger, healthier chicks than in using younger birds. I like also a low-set bird with not too long legs, as they have a stronger constitution. Never use birds overfed for show purposes for breeding. When your birds are hatched, keep them in a dry place, I continue the mother in a large coop where the young ones can have free ingress and egress. Move it to a fresh place every few days; feed the poults a little hard-boiled egg or curd, and in a few days mix onion tops or dandelion leaves with oatmeal scalded and a little cornmeal with shorts, about half of each. There is a weed called wild cammomile, which they are very fond of, cut up fine and mixed with their feed, and it is very good for them.

The whole secret in raising turkeys is to beware of wet, lice and rats. I had no trouble with the first; the second I used to dust the hen with insect powder and sulphur when I set her, and once again when the poults were hatched, and if I saw any of the young ones drooping I gave them a little dusting, as I believe more young turkeys are lost through lice than any other cause. For rats there is nothing like a few good cats. I always kept water and milk before them, as they relish a change of food and drink. I often in cold wet weather dusted a little pepper in their food, and for the first few weeks fed them four or five times daily, but not more at a time than they could eat up clean. Never let the food sour in their dishes. After the first few weeks, I let the hen out of the coop, never until the dew was off the grass, and invariably saw that they returned home at night, as owls and hawks are apt to get them if they roost on the fences. I fed them a little wheat at night, and they generally came home themselves after a few lessons. Scalded corn mixed with shorts, onions and dandelion leaves mixed is the best food for young turkeys until they are able to eat small wheat or some other grain. As turkeys are great foragers, they will pick up numerous insects, such as grasshopper and other injurious insects; in fact, no farmer should be without a flock of turkeys. They may injure a little grain, but they do far more good than all the injury. The bronze is the best and the hardiest; the white Holland next; they were quieter and did not wander so far from home as the bronze. I found them equally hardy. In fattening turkeys for market, never shut them up. You can fatten all other fowls in confinement, but turkeys pine and die and do no good shut up. A box of gravel or grit should be kept where young turks can have access to it."

Britons As Beef Eaters.

Philadelphia Record.

A recent publication by the department of agriculture shows that Great Britain imports more meat animals and packing house products than all the other countries of Europe combined. The value of such British imports for 1904, was $283,000,000. Nearly all the live meat animals imported in Great Britain came from the United States and Canada. The British fresh beef trade seems to be drifting away from the United States.

CLEVELAND'S BIRTHDAY.

He Will Be Sixty-Nine To-morrow.

Princeton, N.J., March 17.—Ex-President Grover Cleveland will be sixty-nine years old to-morrow, and his friends are preparing to celebrate the anniversary of his birth. Mr. Cleveland enjoys the distinction of being the only ex-president of the United States living at the present day. Although no longer actively engaged in politics, he is still considered a man of strong political power and influence. It is a remarkable fact that there has been scarcely an important question that arose since his retirement from the presidency, concerning which his judgment and advice was not sought. He is probably a greater man now, at least in a wider sense, than when he was president, although his strength lies not in his party affiliations.

Mr. Cleveland has lately been brought into prominence through the re-organization of the insurance companies after the scandalous exposure of the investigation. When the scandal covered officials of the insurance companies, he faced the difficult task of winning back public confidence. They saw that it could only be done by placing in charge some man who had the absolute confidence of the American public. In that crisis they turned to Grover Cleveland and finally succeeded in inducing him to become the head of the Equitable board of trustees, to bring a new regime into the company that the Hydes and Alexanders had discredited.

Mr. Cleveland is still hale and sound. He is a believer in the preserving influence of outdoor exercise, and there is no man more devoted to fishing and hunting than he. His aspirations in that line do not run toward big game. He is satisfied with smaller game and enjoys it immensely to spend his leisure time in the woods or along the streams, hunting and fishing.

A Millionaire To-Day.

Tusujiro Ishikawa, a Japanese journalist, described in New York a German capitalist of Yokohama.

"It is no wonder," he sais, "that this man is a millionaire. His fertility of invention is remarkable, and this fertility is never cramped by principles or by straitlaced notions of morality."

"They say of this man," declared Mr. Ishikawa, "that he reached Johannesburg in his youth quite destitute, save for a needle and a can of condensed milk.

"Immediately on his arrival he announced that the smallpox was approaching and that he was a surgeon, and with his only two possessions he vaccinated all the good Johannesburgers at $5 a head."

Failure.

Harper's Weekly.

"Very frequently," says a New York lawyer, "there is an element of unconscious humor in the findings of a jury. To my mind, the best I ever heard in this connection was the verdict brought in by a coroner's jury in Michigan, who were called upon to pass upon the case of the sudden death of a merchant in Lansing.

"The finding was as follows: 'We, the jury, find from the physician's statement that the deceased came to his death from heart failure, superinduced by business failure, which was caused by speculation failure, which was the result of failure to see far enough ahead.'"

NEW C.P.R. BOATS.

The Empresses Are Finest Things Afloat.

According to Alfred Allayne Jones, president of the Alberta Agencies, limited, the new Canadian Pacific railway, Atlantic steamships, the Empress of Britain, and the Empress of Ireland, are two of the very finest things afloat. Mr. Jones, who has spent the last two months in Europe, passed through Montreal en route west, last night, having arrived from Liverpool at Halifax on the 3rd inst. by the steamship Tunisian, after a somewhat rough passage.

"Before sailing," said Mr. Jones to The Herald, last night, "I took the opportunity of going to Glasgow and having a good inspection of the Empresses. Both are well on the way to completion, although the Empress of Britain is much more advanced than the Empress of Ireland, as she is expected to sail for Quebec on or about May 1st.

"Fairfield company, in charge of the works, have the Britain in the waters of the Clyde, and while they are one of the biggest of the shipbuilders' firms in old Scotland, and have turned out many noted vessels, the two C. P. R. boats are steamships of which they may be extremely proud. They are beauties. The Britain rides the waters like a duck, and, in its interior finish, can compare with anything afloat, or that sails from any port on this side of the Atlantic.

"She has three series of staterooms and the third-class accommodations are equal to almost any of the second-class in the best ocean boats, in fact."

Oddest Patrol Wagon.

Writing of the local patrol waggon, the Penang correspondent of the Straits Times, Singapore, says: "It forcibly calls to mind at first sight, a four-wheeled baker's cart, bar the fact it is drawn by the slowest pair of bullocks in the settlement. There is nothing grim at all about it, for it is commanded by a sleepy Malay constable perched on the box, its roof and sides are formed of white canvas, and it has no door to close it at the back, but merely an opening in which another Malay constable half slumbers. Two or three other constables ride inside sitting on the benches with the prisoners, who seem to be too struck with novelty at the ride to make any attempt to escape. I should say that an escape from this prison van would be as easy as falling off a log."
