Rheumatism
I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.
In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it uniformly cures all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. Those sand-like granular waste, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend

TO PREVENT BRONCHITIS or CONSUMPTION
Do not neglect a cold or cough no matter how slight as the irritation spreading throughout the delicate lining of the sensitive air passages sooner or later will lead to fatal results.
If on the first appearance of a cough or cold you would take a few doses of
Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup
you would save yourself a great deal of unnecessary suffering.
Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the lung healing virtues of the pine tree combined with Wild Cherry Bark and other pectoral remedies.
It stimulates the weakened bronchial organs, allays irritation and subdues inflammation, soothes and heals the irritated parts, loosens the phlegm and mucous, and aids nature to easily dislodge the morbid accumulations.
Miss Belle Campbell, Long River, P.E.I., writes: "For some time I was troubled with bronchitis. A friend advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. So I procured three bottles but it only took two to cure me."

WINS MATHEMATICAL SCHOLARSHIP

When young Mordel—he is only nineteen years old—crossed the ocean to enter the great mathematical contest at Cambridge, he had supreme confidence in his ability, and this, after all, is the secret of the average American boy's success.

He did not know that he was to engage in a mental struggle with 250 of the brightest scholars from colleges and universities in all parts of the British empire. But had he known it in advance, the knowledge would not have shaken his determination to show them what an American boy could do.

Mordel won the first prize. This entitles him to a three years' scholarship. He says he intends to study hard during the three years to qualify for the final contest, and he is confident he will win the first graduating prize—the highest honor old St. John's can confer.

His success was all the more remarkable because his education had not passed the high school stage. He is simply a wizard at mathematics.

In his sophomore year at the high school in Philadelphia he completed the entire four-year course of mathematics. Taking up higher mathematics—a branch not even taught in the high school—in a short time he had equipped himself so thoroughly that he could have passed the undergraduate course of any college in America. And he did it all himself!

"I like to solve problems," he declares enthusiastically. "When I went to grammar school I enjoyed algebra as much as the novels I occasionally read. Indeed, the study of mathematics is far more interesting to me than stories told in books."

Mordel's parents are not rich; indeed, his circumstances are very modest. It was against the wish of the father that he entered the high school in 1902. That he seek a position and learn a practical business was deemed by his father a better plan.

So rapid was his advancement in mathematics, and such an aptitude did he show for figures during his freshman year at the high school, that his teacher advised him to prepare for Annapolis.

Still believing a business life would be better and more profitable, the lad's father took him to the University of Pennsylvania to be examined in mathematics by Prof. I. Schwatt.

Why Lewis spent every spare minute in figuring why he stayed up at nights until 2 o'clock and went to bed when sternly commanded, why he got up at four and five in the morning to delve into mysterious volumes, the boy's family could not understand. So immersed was he in algebra and geometry that on his way home from errands he would figure on the paper in which the packages were wrapped.

The fears and misgivings of the father were dispelled after Professor Schwatt's examination.

"The boy is a genius," he declared. "His ability is remarkable. You would make a mistake not to foster it and see that he develops it. There is a great future ahead of him." So Lewis continued his studies.

Library Opened A New World.

So interested was he in the lad that Professor Schwatt gave him access to the library of the University of Pennsylvania. This magnificent collection of books on mathematics opened a new world to the boy.

In his junior year at the high school young Mordel was excused from algebra by his teacher—he knew all there was to learn—and instead began to teach deficient seniors.

"Lewis," said his father one day, would it not be well for you to prepare yourself and enter the examination to try to win a scholarship at the University of Pennsylvania?"

This, indeed, would have pleased the parents and filled them with pride. The boy's eyes sparkled.

"No, father," he replied, "I shall not try for a scholarship at the university. I shall try for one at Cambridge, England."

"What is your ambition? How do you intend to utilize the knowledge of mathematics you will acquire? In astronomy or electricity?" These questions were asked him when he returned from Cambridge, crowned with honor.

"No, indeed," he replied determinedly, "I hope to teach—to become an original investigator.

"There are worlds of mysteries to be solved in mathematics and problems which men have tried and failed on for years. There is no limit to the investigator!"

How he should get the money to go to Cambridge young Mordel at first did not see. But fired with ambition, he continued his studies. He took up differential equations and solid analytical geometry. Then his success in teaching pupils at the high school opened a way.

He began to tutor pupils in mathematics at the school. The teachers and professors interested themselves and helped him in every way. Gradually Lewis had a little bank account steadily growing and his hopes rose.

He sent to Cambridge for a catalogue and began to prepare himself for examination in the various branches. Of these—algebra, trigonometry, geometrical conics, analytical, differential and integral calculus, statics and dynamics—this nineteen-year-old boy was qualified in all but dynamics.

He took up dynamics in June, 1906, and spent the entire summer studying. He also continued to tutor. Last November he bade good-bye to his father and mother and started on his tour to England like an old-fashioned knight starting on an unknown journey in search of honor.

When he arrived at Cambridge the first thing he did was to register. The clerks in the college eyed the boy with a twinkle of amusement in their eyes. When the other students learned a "Yankee" was going to compete they took it somewhat as a joke. And when they learned he was only a high school scholar they took no pains to conceal their laughter.

Marked Change In Treatment.

"My treatment at first was quite different from what it was afterwards," remarked Mordel, on his return. "After my success it was congratulations and dinners. Before that they took no pains to conceal their disdain."

The examination lasted four days. Mordel sat alone at his desk and worked at the problems handed him. Imagine the surprise when the averages were made public and Mordel—the Yankee boy—headed the list with an average of 659!

This was 100 more than the average made by the second best competitor. Mordel's scholarship entitles him to £80, or $400, annually for three years. He will go to Cambridge next October.

"I shall study all branches of mathematics," he said, recently, "and at the end of the three years enter the final contest. The winner, or senior Wrangler, is entitled to a five years' fellowship and $1,250 a year. This is the highest prize to be won at the university, and according to Appleton's Encyclopaedia is worth $50,000."

Mordel was asked when he first discovered his fact for mathematics. "As soon as I began to study figures," he replied.

He was born in Philadelphia on Jan. 28th, 1888, and began going to school when six years of age.

RING WORM AND DANDRUFF.

They Are Each Caused By a Pestiferous Germ.

Ring worm and dandruff are somewhat similar in their origin; each is caused by a parasite. The germ that causes dandruff digs to the root of the hair, and saps its vitality, causing falling hair, and finally, baldness. Without dandruff there would never be baldness, and to cure dandruff it is necessary to kill the germ. There has been no hair preparation that would do this until the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide, which positively kills the dandruff germ, allays itching instantly and makes hair glossy and soft as silk. Take no substitutes. There is nothing "just as good." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Two sizes, 50c. and $1. G. W. Turkish Justice.

Utica Observer.

A mechanic fell from a roof into the street upon a wealthy old Turk and killed him. The son of the deceased caused the arrest of the workman, who was uninjured, and had him taken before the cadi, with whom he used all his influence to have the prisoner condemned.

But the man's innocence was clearly established, and nothing could satisfy the dead man's son save the law of retaliation. Thereupon the venerable cadi gravely directed that the workman be placed upon the exact spot where the victim of the accident had stood. When this was done the cadi turned to the son and said:

"Now, you may go to the roof of the house and fall down upon the man and kill him if you can."

How He Got The Hats Off.

Rochester Herald.

It isn't hard to persuade women to remove their hats "in meetin'," when you know how to go about it. Harry K. Shields, the singer, who assists the Rev. R. H. Crossfield, the evangelist, in his revival meetings, knows how.

"We want a cool song service this afternoon," he said, "but before beginning I want to ask the women in the audience to join with me in a breathing exercise. You know to sing well you must breathe well. First I'll ask you to raise your right arm and take a full breath. Then put your hand on the back of your hat and—remove one hat pin, then the second.

"Ah, I see you're taking them off. Now let's sing the first verse of No. "

And the women didn't mind it a bit.

Were Lightly Punished.

Vermont has unearthed a little meat scandal of its own in the beautiful city of Burlington. A packing house located there was putting up tubercular meat and bob veal for the consumption of the public. The Burlington Rendering company was indicted upon 400 counts for these offences and pleaded guilty to thirty-four counts, upon which it was fined $3,000. The thrifty state of Vermont took into consideration the fact that the company pleaded guilty and saved the state the expense of a trial, and, therefore, made the fines merely nominal and did not press the other 366 counts. Vermont is too parsimonious and lenient. Annihilation is none too good for a company which will sell for food diseased and unclean meat.

Denied He Was Dead.

Manchester Guardian.

A curious case of mistaken identity is reported from Sunderland. A man was found drowned, and he was identified by one or two people in most positive fashion as a Mr. Gilmore. The identification, with full particulars, was notified in the newspapers. Several friends then called at Gilmore's house to condole with his relatives, and found the "dead" man reading the newspaper in which his own obituary appeared. The annoyance at last became so great that he went to the police station, and in person denied that he was dead.

"Not Particularly."

Pall Mall Gazette.

The late Dr. Haig Brown once wrote of the conduct of a Charterhouse boy applying for admission to a Cambridge college, that it was "generally good." This was not enough for the master of the college. "What does 'generally' mean?" he asked Dr. Haig Brown. "It means 'not particularly,'" was the reply.

Is the Most Popular, Fine Shoe on the Canadian Market.

In nearly every large city where exclusive Slater Shoe Stores are conducted the sale of Slater shoes for women has shown phenomenal increases during the past few years.

Like all the Slater products, the Slater women's shoe has a distinctive finish and style, qualities remaining with this aristocratic shoe until it is worn out.

Where there are no Slater shoes for ladies on sale, mail orders sent to the Slater Shoe Store, in Toronto or Montreal, will be promptly filled. A catalogue will be mailed on request.

Lord Tredegar's Joke.

London Morning Leader.

Viscount Tredegar, the veteran peer, who took part in the charge of Balaclava, was in a merry mood at the annual dance which he gave to the servants at Tredegar Park. "I have a notion," he said, "by which most of us could be relieved of those two wearisome questions, the education and suffragette problems. I should like the suragettes to marry into passive resisters, and go—away for a long honeymoon."

Why Liquid Catarrh Remedies Fail

Act Only on the Stomach—Never Reach the Cause of the Disease.

Consider these facts.
Isn't Catarrh due to germs that infest the linings of the nose and throat?
Aren't those germs carried there by the air you breathe?
Certainly they are.
Then in the same way must the remedy be applied—or in other words, you must breathe the remedy or it won't reach the trouble.
That is how Catarrhozone acts—you inhale its germ-killing vapor—breathe it to every spot that is tainted with Catarrh.
No trace of the disease remains after Catarrhozone is used—no more matter to clog up the nose and cause you to cough and spit—no more headache and buzzing ears.
Cure is absolute.
Because Catarrhozone contains such healing balsams and soothing antiseptics it can't help curing every kind of catarrh, throat, lung and bronchial trouble.
Delightfully pleasant to use, simple and quite safe. Large $1 size is guaranteed; small (trial) size, 25c. All dealers, or Polson & Co., Hartford, Conn., U.S.A., and Kingston, Ont.
