Mr. MacKay, the young leader of the liberals in Ontario, has reason to be disappointed, but not cast down over the result of the provincial elections. The Whitney government had strongly entrenched itself in office, and it had resources at its command, for influencing the campaign, of which more may be known hereafter. It had, too, the prestige of success, with a large majority in the legislature. It had rare opportunities to do things. It had launched some new undertakings, and by them caught the popular favour. It had made mistakes—this the premier confessed—and it will make more, its greater power making for its injury.

Meanwhile Mr. MacKay can grow in power. He is a young man whom Hon. Mr. Graham claims the credit of discovering while on a missionary journey in the northern country. As a lawyer of large practice he impressed Mr. Graham with his remarkable mental endowments. He possessed the qualities that make for success, and when later a commissioner of crown lands was wanted in the Ross government, the call went to MacKay. Unfortunately, he had a limited experience in the forefront of battle. He was only a few months in the government before it went out of office. He had only three and a half years in opposition, and less than half of this time he acted as leader of his party. The premier had sneered at his labours, but with a very poor grace, since Mr. Whitney spent many many long years in opposition fighting with less advantage and certainly with less of the magnetism which Mr. MacKay exhibits.

The leader of the liberals in Ontario is an inspiration to the younger men in politics. He is the representative of a very numerous class. They have the ability, the energy, the go. They only want the chance for that development in public service, which will make them the political force the country requires. No one in Ontario, or in Canada, had a more successful tour than Mr. MacKay in the late election. All his supporters, at the points visited, were not elected—that would be too much to expect—but he made a favourable impression everywhere with his splendid platform addresses, and he is bound to occupy a larger place in the public eye with experience and years.

FORCE BEHIND AN APPEAL.

Mr. Hughes may be a candidate for re-election as governor of New York. He had no idea of this originally, but he has a strong desire for certain reforms, and failing to get them through the assembly ere it adjourns again may accept nomination for a second term. Not because he likes the office, or because it is a financial advantage to him, but because he does not want to lay down his work in an unfinished condition.

The assembly, in April, suddenly came to a close when, after a strenuous session of some weeks, it rejected the race track anti-gambling bill. The governor was bent upon its passage. He immediately called a special session, and in the meantime went into a hostile district, and in the election of a new member to take the place of one deceased, made a sensational campaign. Now he has the assurance of sufficient support to carry his anti-gambling bill, and the bill for the enlargement of the public service commission and direct nomination bill. This last named bill provides that "party nominations shall accurately reflect the will of the enrolled voters as directly as possible." In other words a caucus is not the legitimate method of putting a candidate in the field. There should be a meeting of the eligible voters, and the man who contests a district should be the choice of the majority. With such a provision there could be no such conditions or conspiracies as one conservative candidate charged against another in this city. Mr. Hughes' plan is to get rid of the boss, who is a nuisance and a troubler in Canada as well as the United States.

It looks as if the legislature of New York will not be able to complete the stunt assigned to it before the republican national convention is on, followed soon afterwards by the democratic national convention. There may be adjournments of the assembly on this account, and a further postponement of action on Mr. Hughes' recommendations. In that case he is willing to go to the people as a candidate for the governorship a second time, and to make his specialties the platform upon which to invite the support and endorsement of the people.

Stand up for your rights. People may not like it at first, but they will soon learn to keep out of your way.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

In Saskatchewan the government accepted the suggestion of the opposition in rearranging the constituencies. The proceeding is a lesson to some older and more pretentious provinces.

"Mack," in Saturday Night, has become weary of the opposition, and especially of Mr. Foster's fiddling with a programme that he calls "petty and peanutty."

The opposition in the commons is not gaining anything from the stoppage of supplies. The business of the country must go on, and the men who endanger or injure it will be the sufferers.

The Quebec conservatives think that in a dominion contest they would be more successful than in the provincial contest. They will keep on discounting the Laurier influence—to their great chagrin.

Col. Sam Hughes has made no reply to the calling down he received from Sir Charles Tupper on the Yukon railway matter. The colonel is a forgiving soul, which accounts for his great patience under provocation.

Why did Hon. Mr. Prevost leave the Gouin government after doing so much to establish his competency? That is what worries Mr. Bourassa, and when an idea begins revolving in his mind it gives him no rest until it is settled.

Mr. Bourassa has asked a great many questions in his political campaign without getting the answers he desires. He will now be privileged to ask them in the legislature, backed by his ever faithful ally and supporter, Mr. Lavergne.

The noisiest man in the Quebec opposition—the one who dared the government the most in the short campaign, and promised to do the most damage—was defeated, L. O. Pelletier, of Dorchester. Great boasters are not usually very popular.

The Taft boom is on, and the big secretary of the army will, in all probability, on the first throw of the dice, become the candidate of the republican party. He will bring weight to the presidential contest. His opponent will surely be Bryan.

At London, Mr. Whitney said the references to the dissension in the cabinet on the power question was "an inconsequential lie." At Woodstock Mr. Beck admitted that the ministers differed in opinion on the subject, as they had a right to do. What is this difference about?

The farmers in the west are organizing themselves into a political party. They have made many attempts in this direction without success. The grange and patron movements did not pan out well, because the parties did not have and follow any well-defined aims.

The Larkin incident in Toronto is not likely to end with the passage of the polls. The returning officer opened the ballot so that he could see how it was marked, and when Mr. Larkin objected, said he was "sworn to secrecy and had a right to examine ballots." Wherein consists the secrecy?

ABYSS OF OCEAN.

Effects of the Fearful Pressure in Depths.

Brooklyn Eagle.

More than half the surface of the globe is hidden beneath water two miles deep; 7,000,000 square miles lie at a depth of 18,000 feet or more. Many places have been found five miles and more in depth. The greatest depth yet sounded is 31,200 feet, near the Island of Guam.

If Mount Everest, the world's highest mountain, were plucked from its seat and dropped into this spot, the waves would still roll 2,000 feet above its crest.

Into this terrible abyss the waters press down with a force of more than 10,000 pounds to the square inch. The stanchest ship ever built would be crumbled under this awful pressure like an eggshell under a steam roller.

A pine beam fifteen feet long which held open the mouth of a trawl used in making a cast at a depth of more than 18,000 feet was crushed flat, as if it had been passed between rollers.

The body of the man who should attempt to venture to such depths would be compressed until the flesh was forced into the interstices of the bones and his trunk was no larger than a rolling pin. Still, the body would reach the bottom, for anything that will sink in a tub of water will sink to the uttermost depths of the ocean.

Fine For Sailing.

Innisville, June 9.—Miss Bella Craig paid a short visit to her old friends here on Saturday. The Ireton Bros. are working at R. J. Dial's, erecting a verandah and kitchen. Miss Pearl Bolton spent a couple of days at Scotch's Corner, the guest of her friend, Miss Dowdall. The river is at present charming for sailing. A yachting party came up from Carleton on Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ireton spent Sunday with friends in Drummond. The Orangemen are now practising several nights in the week for the great celebration to be held on the 12th. J. H. Morris has begun work at the foundation for his store which he intends moving from its present stand up to his house.

HEIR TO THE THRONE.

A Little Lad Very Popular With People.

PRINCE OLAF.

Little Prince Olaf, the heir to the throne of Norway, is most popular with the masses of his subjects, and bids fair to make a fitting successor to his royal father. The little chap is as sturdy as any of the peasants who inhabit his future dominions. The crown prince was born on July 2nd, 1903, and will be five years of age in a short time. He was christened Alexander, but the Norwegians demand that he be known officially as Prince Olaf, after a celebrated ruler of Norway centuries ago, and their wishes have been followed by King Haakon, a democratic and politic ruler.

Frock Of Pale Green Linen.

The accompanying sketch shows the bodice of a modish little linen frock, the skirt of the gown being a plain circular with a straight front panel. The model gown was of pale lettuce green linen, the bodice slashed over tucked green mull. The yoke was of sheer white embroidered mull, and the girdle was of lettuce green liberty satin.

A Fine Idea.

Brooklyn Junior Eagle.

In several towns in Canada the school children have organized what they call the "Remember Club." They go up or down a street and count the houses or the telegraph poles in so many blocks. They look into show windows and take notice of the things displayed. They count the number of children at school or Sunday school. They count all the white or black horses they see in a day or a week. They look at people on the street and try to remember how they were dressed. They take notice of everything going on, and then meet of a Saturday afternoon and compare notes. The boy or girl who remembers the most is given a prize of a box of candy.

The idea is a fine one. It is the right way to cultivate both observation and memory, and good will come of it. If you ask the average boy or girl how many blocks he or she lives from the post-office or the city hall, not two out of ten can answer you without waiting to count. Many a man in public life has found it of the greatest benefit to remember names and faces.

An Allisonville Runaway.

Allisonville, June 9.—Mr. and Mrs. L. Drummond visited W. Loveless, Redneersville, Sunday last. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Parliament and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Metcalf visited James Boyd, Sunday last. J. W. Harns is busy, tearing down his house, and intends building in the near future. Mrs. Babcock is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Allen Calnan, this week. Miss Arzella Calnan visited her sister, Mrs. L. Drummond, last week. There was a runaway accident Saturday. Miss Ethel Goodwill's horse ran away, throwing Mrs. Istud out and breaking her shoulder, and bruising Miss Ethel quite severely. Mrs. H. H. Forshie and daughter, Sadie, visited Mr. and Mrs. E. Jones, Sunday last. Mr. and Mrs. A. Goodmurphy visited Datons Goodmurphy, Gilead, Sunday. Mrs. S. Humphy and son visited her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Elias Pine, one day last week. Everel Hicks, of Bloomfield, visited his brother, Royal, Monday last. Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Bryant visited D. Ainsworth. Mrs. Bruce McFaul is improving quite slowly.

A TALKING LOVEBIRD.

A Marvel, Self-Taught, to Imitate Human Speech.

London Mail.

A love bird no larger than a canary has taught itself to speak as fluently and as distinctly as the best of talking parrots at the village of Ambleside, near Stourbridge, Worcestershire. The bird is of exquisite plumage and belongs to J. Skidmore, of Stamford house, Ambleside, a well-known resident in the district. It was given to Mr. Skidmore about six months ago by his son-in-law, who had had it for eighteen months without its showing any powers of conversation. During the last few months of its life in Worcestershire, however, it has acquired a remarkable aptitude for repeating all that is said to it, though it has received no special training.

To a correspondent who "interviewed" it recently the bird suddenly remarked, "Kiss me quick," giving an anticipatory smack. It politely remarked, "How do you do?" and flatteringly added, "You're a little beauty, aren't you?" all in a soft tone that was quite distinct from the raucous accents of the average parrot. It melodiously whistled a couple of bars of the national anthem and proceeded to give some very realistic imitations of the calls of thrushes, sparrows and linnets.

"Hanschen," as the bird is named, weighs barely an ounce and is believed to be the smallest bird of his kind capable of imitating human speech. His chief companion is a large stuffed, green parrot, without which he is never happy, and whose plumage he has so pecked away with kisses that the entire head and neck are now bald. The lovebird, whenever taking a meal of linnet seed, places a little within the motionless beak of the stuffed parrot, though when in a conversational mood, he frequently indulges in furious attacks on his silent companion.

The "Hecla" Furnace

Each one of these four grates can be shaken separately

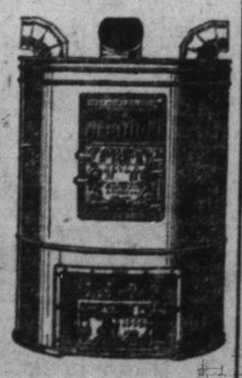
The outer edge of a furnace fire burns up quicker than the center.

This raises a wall of ashes between the firepot and the coals, just where the hottest part of the fire should be.

To heat the house properly and economically, these ashes must be removed whenever the furnace is attended to.

In most furnaces, all the grates are geared together. They must all be shaken together. As the coal burns unevenly, either good coal must be shaken down with the ashes, or the fire slightly shaken and the ashes and clinkers raked down with a poker.

In the "Hecla" Furnace, each of the four grate bars can be shaken separately. When ashes accumulate on the sides of the firepot, shake only the side bars. This means getting rid of all the ashes—saving coal—keeping the fire clean—and doing away with sifting ashes.



When the furnace is almost out, you can shake down the ashes farthest from the fire without disturbing the live coals, and quickly have a blazing fire.

Clinkers cause no trouble, as they do with grates that are fastened together and must all be shaken together.

It is certainly easier to shake one grate than four.

An Automatic Lock holds each bar in position. This Lock opens as the shaker is put on and locks when released.

"Hecla" Triangular Bar Grates may be removed in an instant and each bar replaced separately.

Our new catalogue describes the "Hecla" Bar Grates, Steel Ribbed Firepot, Fused Joints and other exclusive features. If you are going to put in a new furnace this year, write for a free copy. 56
