Ottawa Fair, Sept. 9th to 16th.

The greatest effort yet is being made by the directors of the Central Canada Exhibition Association to ensure the success of the annual fair at Ottawa this year, September 9th to 16th. This is the big show of Eastern Canada, and $25,000 will be given in prizes for live stock. A new building has been secured for sheep and swine, and everything possible will be done to ensure the comfort of stock. Entries close Sept. 4th, and this rule will be strictly enforced. The agricultural, industrial and live stock features are the essentials, but special attention has also been given to the grand stand programme, which will include horse races, vaudeville, military manoeuvres, balloon ascensions, loop the loop aviator, a big spectacular night show with fireworks, and a hundred other features. Reduced rates have been secured on all railways.

SEMITIC CONTRIBUTIONS

WHAT SEMITES HAVE DONE FOR CIVILIZATION.

Subject of Masterly Address by Rev. Dr. Wallace—Kaiser and Advisers Would Have Made Brilliant Record About 2000 B.C.

"Kaiser Wilhelm II. and his military advisers would have made a brilliant record for themselves in Assyria about 2000 B.C.," declared Rev. Dr. H. T. Wallace, of Queen's, Tuesday afternoon in the course of a masterly address to the students of Queen's Summer School on "The Semitic Peoples and Their Contribution to Civilization." The speaker was referring to the contributions of the Semites, notably the Babylonians and the Assyrians, to civilization in the region of science and knowledge in general and said:

"In the sphere of history we have invaluable chronicles of Babylonian and Assyrian kings—chiefly of later period—and great inscriptions recording the achievements of emperors and armies. These are colored by a stupendous pride on the part of the kings and by a supreme confidence in the good will of God and by the calm assumption that the forcing of their culture upon neighboring peoples was an act of grace, all of which is quite Teutonic in spirit.

Likened to Germany.

"In military science the Babylonians and Assyrians overshadowed all their rivals and occupied much the same place as Germany did in Europe in August, 1914. To have marched vast armies across mountains and deserts, to have subdued villages, towns and cities, and to have made whole regions tremble at the very sound of their name, for frightfulness is no modern invention—this is the proud record of the kings of Assyria. But it is an instructive lesson of history to read further and see how the great empires thus formed crumbled to dust when the first breach was made in the wall of might upon which the whole superstructure was built."

It was in astronomy, the speaker pointed out, that the Assyrians made a real contribution to human knowledge. Their astronomical observations and deductions gave to the world the calendar in much its present form, and were the foundation upon which all subsequent peoples had built. Similarly, in mathematics, they worked out an elaborate and consistent system of measures of time, space and bulk based for the most part upon the number twelve.

In the Region of Art.

Turning to the region of art, the lecturer referred to the huge temples and palaces of Babylon. The temples sometimes consisted of seven stories and reached a height of 300 feet. The royal palaces were even greater. The scarcity of wood and stone made it necessary to build almost entirely of clay, both of fine-burnt and merely sun-burnt bricks, cemented together sometimes merely with wet clay and later with asphalt and mortar. For the same reason their architects were led to the discovery of the arch and the vaulted dome, both rounded and pointed, which was characteristic especially of their palaces. The walls of these larger buildings were of tremendous thickness, there being samples of walls twenty, forty, fifty and even sixty five feet thick.

In sculpture the skill of these early people was no less marked, particularly the bas-reliefs, which have proved to be invaluable sources for the historian of this early period. In metallurgy and in painting, too, notable progress was made.

In the realm of literature the Semitic peoples produced some splendid compositions. The great epics of Babylon displayed primitive barbaric grandeur of conception and workmanship. The annals of the Assyrian kings and some of the larger inscriptions also revealed considerable literary power. The stories of the Old Testament, especially the earlier one, were marvellous in their literarry power and beauty, and in the region of prose were on a level with the great Homeric poems.

Contribution in Religion.

Lastly, the religion and literature of the Semites, as a vehicle of religious teaching, had, beyond question, been one of the factors in the world's history. The three great world-religions were given to the world by this race—Judaism, Christianity and Mohammedanism.

"From the crude ideas of religion and the equally crude morality of the early Semitic tribes," concluded the speaker, "to the beginnings of enlightenment among the Israelites, through the prophetic period, and later Judaism, to the beginning of our Christian religion is indeed a long, long journey. To review it even in this brief way is to be impressed with the vitality and life of God's truth."

Historical Sketch.

Dr. Wallace prefaced his address proper by a historical sketch of the Semites. It seemed to be established, he said, that the cradle of the Semitic race was Arabia. There were reasons for believing that at a period still more remote, indeed prehistoric, the so-called Hamitic people of Africa and the Semites were originally one race, and that the Semites broke away from this larger union, crossed into Asia, and after many years of life in the Arabian peninsula gradually began to spread over the adjoining lands.

The name "Semite" and its adjective "Semitic" were derived from the Genesis tradition, which made Shem, the oldest of the three sons of Noah, the father of the race to which the Hebrews belonged. The Semites were divided into two branches, the northern and the southern. The chief members of the former were: Babylonians, Aramaeans, Canaanites, and Hebraics, while the southern branch had for its members the Sabaeans, Ethitpians and Arabians.

On motion of J. A. Ramsay, secretary of the Summer School Association, a vote of thanks was tendered the lecturer. Prof. MacClement, who presided, also said a few words of praise.

The yacht Corona was at the Kingston Shipbuilding Company's wharf to-day.

ROSETTES FROM THE FRONT

WON BY 21ST BATTALION TRANSPORT AT HORSE SHOW.

Sent to R. J. Bushell By Sergt. Hawkey, Who Suggests They Be Given To Winning Pitcher and Best Cake Maker at Coming Fair.

Three rosettes won by the 21st Battalion transport at a brigade horse show held on July 7th, a couple of miles behind the trenches, are in the possession of R. J. Bushell, secretary and manager of Kingston's Industrial Fair. They were sent by Sergt. Hawkey, formerly reeve of the township of Kingston.

At the show the 21st transport took three firsts and four seconds. The rosettes sent by Sergt. Hawkey represent two firsts and one second. The firsts were won by Corp. Troup, heavy draught, and Pte. Booth, good driving. The second prize was captured by Pte. Suzah, light draught.

Sergt. Hawkey states that Sergt. McCullagh suggests that one of the firsts be pinned on the heaving breast of the heaver of the winning ball team at the fair this fall.

The writer, who is apparently cake hungry, would have the other first given to the lady baking the best cake in Kingston township, adding "that's what we need most out here."

PREVENTION PAYS.

Efficiency in Child Protection Saves Trouble Later On.

J. J. Kelso writes: Any builder will tell you that unless you lay well the foundation your fine structure will be in constant danger of collapse. The same principle applies in all social work. If the children are neglected and their interests consigned to unskilled hands there will be no progress and no improvement along right social lines. Reformatories, jails, prison farms, refuges, havens and penitentiaries will still be necessary. People put off going to the doctor until they are ready for the undertaker. Money is freely spent for reformation instead of for an efficient method of prevention.

When will people begin to realize that to properly and systematically organize child-saving work is the only correct remedy for most of the social ills of the community?
