HELEN.— A BALLAD.

BY FUZ.

Dark, gloomy, dreary, was the night,
No glimmering stars were seen;
Nor moon to lend her rays to light
The Peasant o'er the green.

Wild-heaving to the dark'ning skies,
The billows toss'd their foam,
And Sailors wiped their tearful eyes,
And thought of Heaven and home.

On such a night (despite the storm
And fast-descending rain,)
There trod two scarce-seen human forms
In silence o'er a plain.

The one was old, and in his hand
He held a staff, that served
To help across the rugged land,
His limbs with age unnerved.

The other was both firm and young,
His fingers grasp'd a dirk;
Around his waist two weapons hung,
That might do bloody work.

They halted near a mountain's foot,
Where sat the old man down,
Near to a pine-tree's spreading root,
With tufted moss o'ergrown.

Scarce had they stayed a moment there,
When far, far overhead,
A mournful shriek rose on the air!
The young man, starting, said:

"List! heard ye not that shriek, De Vere,
That the wild winds swept by!
We must ascend—nay—stay thou here,
I'll rescue her or die!

"I heard the wind amongst the trees,"
The gray old man replied;
"These old ears are not pierced with ease,"
He further said, and sighed.

"Yet still methinks some ruffian hand,
Long used to deeds of strife,
Hath borne my Helen from the land—
My child!—my stay!—my life!"

The young man sprang from rock to rock,
Fresh nerved with every leap,
And soon did gain the mountain top,
Soon cleared the dangerous steep.

He looked—he saw—oh! horrid sight!
The lily of the vale—
Fair Helen—struggling for her right,
Dishevelled, weary, pale!

A robber held her snow-white arms,
And harshly spoke her name:
"Helen, thy many peerless charms
Doth fan my long-nursed flame!

"Nay, struggle not; Ludovic ne'er
Shall wed his fair one now:
Here—Lily of the valley—here,
I'll force from thee thy vow!"

"Never!" cried Helen; and once more
That wild shriek rent the air;
The youth—Ludovic—stood before
The hideous and the fair.

Firmly he clutched his weapon's hilt
And wildly glanced around:
"Blood! thy blood, Fiend! must soon be spilt,
Stand, villain! stand thy ground!"

The bandit rais'd a gleaming blade,
And aimed at Helen's breast;
But, from behind, his hand was stay'd,
His arms were firmly press'd.

"Helen! my child!" 'twas old De Vere
That gained the scene of strife
In time to claim a grateful tear,
And save his daughter's life.

He loosed his grasp—the pause was brief—
The upraised weapon fell,
And leaped the Robber down the cliff
With an infuriate yell.

The steel had pierced his villain breast,
His own hand dealt the blow,
And soon he found a final rest
In the deep gulph below.

The waters closed, and then roll'd on
As sullen as before;
One foaming wave the beach did have
Deep tinged with human gore.

Scarce need I tell when old De Vere
And Helen left the spot,
Ludovic saw them safely near,
Nay reach, their rude made cot.

Nor that, ere autumn's chilly gale
Swept o'er the ebbing tide,
Helen—the lily of the vale—
Became Ludovic's bride.

Thus guilt will meet its own reward,
While virtues' worth shall rise
As pure and bright as Heaven's light,
To Heaven's placid skies.

Kingston, November 12th, 1844.

Facts and Scraps, original and select.

☞ THE SPEAKER.—Sir Allan MacNab passed upwards from Montreal to Hamilton, yesterday, but returns in time to be present at the Great Dinner in the Town Hall, on the 21st inst. We have every reason to know that neither Mr. Moffatt nor any other Conservative but Sir Allan is a candidate for the Speakership, and that the government will be pleased at the election of the gallant Knight.

☞ THE DONKEY WOT WOULDN'T GO.—That most impudent little creature, the Ass-istant Secretary, Mr. Dunkin, has had the assurance to attempt the getting of a seat in Parliament, doubtless for the purpose of speaking in lieu of that dumb gentleman, Mr. Secretary Daly, who though an Irishman, does not possess the gift of the gab—which it seems the little creature has. As a matter of course the Donkey was as well drubbed as he deserved, and his opponent, Mr. Watts, the late Member, returned by an overwhelming majority. Mr. Watts supports the Governor General.

☞ ST. ANDREW'S DAY.—The gallant sons of Scotia intend celebrating the Natal Day of their Tutelar Saint, by a Public Ball, instead of a Dinner, to take place in the new Town Hall, the use of which has been kindly granted by the Corporation.

☞ A BROTHER OF THE PRESS.—Mr. WM. J. MARTIN, so long connected with the Chronicle & Gazette Office, appears to-day before the public in another capacity. He has commenced business, as a Grocer and Wine Merchant, at the old Chronicle & Gazette stand, King-street, and as he is a young man of excellent business habits, we make no doubt but he will merit and receive a full share of public patronage. At any rate he has our good wishes.

☞ The most awful thunder storm we have experienced here, occurred on Monday morning, about one o'clock. It was really terrific, and the citizens were greatly disturbed and alarmed, by the suddenness and violence of the visitation.—The rain fell in torrents, and considerable damage has been done by the lightning. The "Pheasant Inn," on Queen-street, kept by Mr. McCallum, was struck by the lightning and consumed, along with one or two other houses adjoining. We shall probably hear of further damage having been done, on this occasion, in other parts of the country.

Toronto Colonist.

☞ THE INSPECTOR-GENERALSHIP.—It is generally understood that W. B. Robinson, Esquire, member for Simcoe, and brother of the Chief Justice, will be the new Inspector-General of the Province. Mr. Robinson stands high in the estimation of the public, and it is said will fill the Office in question with much ability. If we must have a member of the Family Compact, we believe a better selection could not be made. Mr. Robinson's views will be at all times fearlessly and unequivocally expressed,—and if they are somewhat of the old Tory school, they will be vigorously carried into effect. There will be no temporizing policy pursued by an Administration composed of such men.—Toronto Globe.

☞ THE SPEAKERSHIP.—The first question which will come before the House on its assembling will be the appointment of the Speaker.—We cannot say how much gratified we are to find that all parties are likely to agree in the selection of a fit and proper person. Our esteemed contemporary the British Colonist, the demi-official government organ for the Western Province has, "by authority" we presume, brought forward the Hon. A. N. Morin as the Government candidate for this lucrative and responsible office. The Chronicle & Gazette, the Government advertisement paper, follows in the wake of the Colonist, as usual, and strongly supports the propriety of Mr. Morin's being elected. We are quite sure there is not a man in or out of Parliament who will be more acceptable to the Reform party than Mr. Morin, and we shall cordially rejoice at his elevation. It is really delightful to find that our "Conservative" friends are disposed to use their success with so much discretion. We begin to hope that under the paternal government of the new Regime, peace and good-will will be universal, turmoil and confusion will be put to flight, and Whig and Tory bury their animosities in tokens of friendship and brotherly kindness. We would not wonder if the Globe itself should get a lot of Government advertisements one of these days.—Ib.

☞ THIRD RIDING OF YORK.—In this Riding no declaration of qualification was put in by Mr. Small until the day on which the returns were made up—although his qualification was formally demanded at one of the polling places by an Elector. In this way we conceive the act has been violated, as the electors are deprived of the right specially given them by statute of ascertaining if the man for whom they give their votes is legally qualified. Mr. Monro will, we learn, vigorously follow up his protest.—Toronto Patriot.

The Unicorn left this day, at noon, on her last downward trip. Her departure at this season of the year is an epoch; it is the severment of our direct communication with the great Atlantic, and the "homes of our fathers," and when leaving the wharf she fired a farewell salute. The harbor is now desolate. Where a few short weeks since rode a multitude of ships awaiting their burthens, are now seen but a solitary straggler, environed or in the neighborhood of a few small craft from the country parishes, plying their arduous traffic to the last moment.—Quebec Mercury, Nov. 12.

☞ 'LO! THE POOR INDIAN.'—The bride of the Ojibbeway Indian, Nottenkam, or the "Strong Wind," an account of whose marriage we copied a few months ago from the English papers, has returned to the parental roof, she and her spouse not having been able to live comfortably together.

☞ THE SIAMESE TWINS.—A letter in the South Carolina Spartan furnishes the following very interesting account of Chang and Eng, the Siamese Twins, their two wives and two babies. "You may be aware," says the writer, "that some few years since, the Siamese Twins, Chang and Eng, retired from the public gaze, and settled down in Wilkes County, as farmers. You will also recollect that during the last year, it was published in some of the newspapers that they had married two sisters. This notice was treated as a hoax by some of the journals, and I incline to think that public opinion settled that the two twins were living in a state of single blessedness. To my surprise, I find that the supposed hoax is a literal fact, and that these distinguished characters are married men. Mrs. C. and Mrs. E. are well known to several of my acquaintances, and are said to be very amiable and industrious. Each of the ladies has presented her partner lately with an heir, in the person of a fine, fat, bouncing daughter!" It is said that Chang and Eng, with their wives and children, contemplate making a tour through South Carolina in a year or two. The twins enjoy excellent health, are very lively, talkative, and apparently happy, and will doubtless prove more interesting and attractive in their second tour than they did in their first.

☞ FRIGHTFUL ASSAULT WITH AN AXE.—A negro man assaulted a negro woman in Bradford street, Moyamensing, on Monday afternoon, with an axe, and came near severing her head from her body. The negro, whose name is Frederick Williams, struck the woman with the weapon, and cut an awful gash on the side of her neck. He was arrested, and committed by Alderman Dennis. The woman was attended by Dr. Duffee, who sewed up the wound. The large blood vessel escaped, and the injury was not considered necessarily fatal.

☞ THE ST. LAWRENCE RAPIDS.—I embarked on board the Charlotte steamer, to go down the St. Lawrence rapids. This route, though now the ordinary one, was never taken by steamers till this year. There is now a line of small boats which make the entire round, starting from Montreal, going up the Ottawa to Bytown, thence by the Rideau to Kingston, and then down the St. Lawrence to Montreal. The mail still goes by the large steamers, which correspond with a line of stages at every portage, but passengers generally prefer going down the rapids, as being quicker, less troublesome, and cheaper, besides the excitement attending upon a "feat." By going the last rapid, at Lachine, the steamers forfeit their insurance, consequently only one or two do so, and these do not insure; the others go by the Lachine Canal to Montreal. The rapids are four in number—the Long Sault, the Cedars, the Cascades, and Lachine. All of them are, to a novice, very formidable-looking. At the last, in particular, there is a pitch which fairly lifts the stern of the boat and plunges her bow into the spray so as to cover the deck with water; but, it having been once ascertained that she will live through it, there is no further danger than that of missing the channel, which is narrow, and running on the rocks at either side of it. We took in an Indian Pilot at each rapid. These fellows have been in the habit of taking down timber rafts and bateaux, and are now employed by the steamers. A barge was lost last week from the foolhardiness of the captain, who refused to take in a pilot; and, indeed, there is no water to spare, even in the channel, at this time of year. Our boat, which only drew three feet ten inches, is the largest that attempts it, and though provided with the best possible pilotage, we struck once slightly. I confess to a momentary palpitation when I felt the bump, for we were going at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour, but it was merely a scrape, showing, however, that it is "touch and go." But we were made to arrange ourselves in regular positions on deck, so as to keep the vessel on an even keel, and the steam was slackened to half speed as we went down the rapids.—Godley's Letters from America.

☞ TERMINATION ROCK AT NIAGARA.—We have been foolish enough to go behind the Falls, which is a most disagreeable operation, involving a complete change of dress, a thorough wetting, and a probable cold, and which does not "pay" in the least. You blunder along a narrow pathway, with your head down, in the midst of a tremendous shower of spray, till you get to Termination Rock, short of which your inexorable guide will not let you turn. It is all very well to talk of the magnificent sensation produced by reflecting on the huge curtain of waters which is hung between you and the world. I can only say, that they must have a very lively imagination indeed who can enjoy "strong sensations" while under a blinding shower of cold water, and, as there is, unfortunately, not the least danger (except of rheumatism,) we had not even the consolation of flattering ourselves that we were heroes. As a climax of absurdity, the guide offered us, on our return, tickets, forsooth, which we might keep to back our assertion that we had reached Termination Rock. In spite of warnings, I fear, people will continue to do this "lion," that they may be able to say that they have done it, the main motive which sets most people upon travelling and sight-seeing.—Ibid.

VERY IMPORTANT, INDEED!—"Mr. Hincks arrived in this city to-day, from Upper Canada."

Pilot, of Monday.

PHENOMENON.—On Saturday morning, at 4 o'clock, whilst the steamboat Ohio was coming up the river Delaware by the light of the moon, which was shining in unclouded splendor, all at once a slight wind sprung up from the N. N. East, and a fog passed over the steamer, which not only obscured the brightness of the moon, but made all around so dark that it was impossible to see one-fourth the length of the boat. This sudden transition from a beautiful clear and pleasant night, to one of gloom and darkness, caused the vessels on that part of the river, to cast their anchors. In a few moments, however, the fog passed, and the benighted and frightened "fresh water salts" were cheered once more by the bright rays of the same old moon. The vessels, and there were not a few, weighed anchor and set sail; but the sails were no sooner filled by the wind, than another vein of fog came on, and that section of the river was enshrouded in the blackest of darkness. The anchors were again let go, and amidst the gloom of the night and the rattling of the chains of cables, the "Chesapeake sailors particularly" stood dumb-struck, while others thought that "chaos was come again," and that the awful convulsion was only casting its shadow before. They were not kept long in a state of suspense, for in a few minutes the fog passed away, and the moon assumed its wonted brilliancy, and lit up the face of the deep.

ATTEMPT TO SCUTTLE AT LIMERICK.—Some unknown persons at Limerick have bored holes in the bottoms of ships about to put to sea! three Welsh vessels were thus scuttled. A public meeting was held, the Mayor presiding; and Mr. Steele, in a very solemn manner, exhorted the people of Limerick to purge themselves of the disgrace; which he declared to be a more monstrous duty than the support of Repeal itself. The proceedings, conducted in a very legislatorial manner, without cheers, terminated in a resolution to offer £5 for the discovery of the offenders. The Corporation have offered a reward of £175. Four men have been arrested on suspicion; three have been released on their own recognizances, and one has been remanded.

☞ FEASTING A COMPOSITOR.—A letter from Hamburg of the 14th October says: "Last Saturday all the persons engaged on the daily journal, the Correspondent Impartial de Hambourgh, celebrated by a dinner the sixtieth anniversary of the entry of one of the compositors, named Hein, on the paper. During that long period he had not missed his work a single day. He is now eighty-eight years of age, enjoys excellent health, and does his work like a young man. There were 220 persons present at the dinner, including all the employing printers of the place. One of these gentlemen, M. Bodecker, sent 100 pine apples, 400 lbs. of fine grapes, and an immense quantity of flowers for the feast."

☞ MORSE'S ELECTRO MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.—This wonderful machine is likely ere long to become a successful rival to all other modes of transmitting business and social communications from place to place. With a line of the Telegraphic conductors extending from this City to New York, the Merchants of either City would no longer send their letters by Mail or Express, and be subject to a delay of thirty six hours for an answer. They would be compelled, by the natural course of events, to use the Telegraphic conveyance, by which means they might get an answer to their communications in from half an hour to an hour and a half, according to the distance their correspondents might be from the Telegraphic Office. It would be no longer time to communicate with New Orleans, if the Telegraphic conductors extended thus far, than it would with New York, or than it does between School street and Court street in this city, where the Telegraph is now in operation. The only time consumed is that requisite for striking the characters, (the electric fluid travelling the circuit of the conductors at a velocity of 180,000 miles in a second,) and Professor Morse has made 100 of the characters in a minute thro' a long communication, between Washington and Baltimore. It would, therefore, require but ten minutes to transmit a communication of 1000 letters, which would be much longer than the majority of business letters. Prof. Morse has a system, also, by which all communications through the Telegraph are made private. The most private business letter, or the most charming epistle of love, may be communicated into the Telegraph, without a word or sentence being intelligible to any body but the writer and his correspondent.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

☞ JUVENILE M. P.s.—Dr. Welwood mentions with commendation a speech of Recorder Martin, in the 10th year of King James, when there was an account taken of forty gentlemen not above twenty years of age, and some not exceeding sixteen, which caused the grave old lawyer to say, that "it was the ancient custom for old men to make laws for young men; but that now he saw the case altered, and that these were children elected into the great council of the nation, which came to invade and invert nature, and to enact laws to govern their fathers." His remonstrance was adopted by Mr. Weston, who said, that "their meeting was pestered with the admission of so many young men, and that it was not fit they should make laws for the Kingdom, who were not in their own persons liable to the law, who could not themselves be bound by contracts except for necessities." In 1628, Sir Edward Coke again noticed the evil; "Many under the age of twenty-one sit here by connivance, but, if questioned, would be put out." If this were the law of parliament, it was in practice constantly evaded, highly to the displeasure of puritan elders, who muttered that "parliament was not the place to cater whelps in." No such sweet music was, however, made by any stern republican—no such elegant discourse by any grave senior—as the plaudits of the house elicited from the tuneful Waller, not less excellent poet than orator, who sat before he was seventeen; and from the first Lord Shaftesbury, who could boast of being able to subdue his audience at nineteen years of age. Some excuse might be made by such early blossoms for even unripe fruit.—Under the commonwealth, Lord Falkland gave striking proof of the prudence of youth. In 1658, some opposed his admission—he was barely of legal age—urging that he had not sown his wild oats. He retorted, "If I have not, I may sow them in this house, where there are plenty of geese to pick them up." In the same parliament, greater laxity was exhibited than youth could excuse: "A very young man stood up, and told a story of Cain and Abel, and made a speech nobody knew to what purpose." This very young man, if he would apply scripture illustrations, might have learned to "tarry at Jericho till his beard was grown."—Townsend's House of Commons.

☞ THE GIPSEYS.—The anniversary gipsey festivals are held during the first week after Christmas at the house and grounds of the Rev. Mr. Crabbe, near Southampton, and members of the swarthy tribe come from very distant parts of the country to this reunion of their race. The groups at Springhill House have a very picturesque appearance on these occasions. Gipsey carts, shaggy ponies, and the roughest of donkies are on the skirts or the grounds; Gipseys of all grades are lounging about, the faces of the greater part unequivocally showing their identity—the English climate for centuries not having bleached the brown complexions and raven hair of the Gitana. The majority are tidily dressed, having put on their best to please "the Gipseys' Friend," as they all affectionately call Mr. Crabbe. A few of the women are tawdrily attired in red stuff gowns, with black bonnets and showy ribbands; these are principally denizens of the New Forest. A few are in wretched plight; one woman had ten children living out of twelve, all without shoes and nearly naked. These are visitors not under the especial care of the institutions.—There are several young persons who have been apprenticed, and now follow trades, or are domestic servants through the agency of the institution. There used to be a goodly number of aged returned Gipsies who were pensioners on the institution—a great portion of them have died; they will be found referred to in the report. The number of children present is always very great in portion to the adults. An aged dame name Carter, has fifty-six grandchildren, most of whom met her on the occasion. These anniversaries have been generally well attended by the principal inhabitants of the neighborhood. At the anniversary on Wednesday last the number of visitors was much less than is usual, owing to the state of the roads, which were in a frightful condition, and the heaviness of the atmosphere, which betokened rain. There was, nevertheless, good attendance, and on this occasion the Marquis of Conyngham and his family were present.
