AMIDST the many valuable Establishments of this Country, there are none more extensively conducive to the interest of the Public, and the benefit of individuals, than well conducted Life Assurance Offices.
THE VERY IMPORTANT TRUTH cannot be too widely disseminated,—it ought to be distinctly known that every family, and to every member of society, that by the yearly payment of a moderate sum, a person may secure to his wife, his children, his helpless relatives, or his friends an adequate provision against the pecuniary distress which might be produced by his death.
An Assurance being effected, all risk is removed, and he has the consoling reflection, that whether he live a month, a year, or many years, he has placed his family beyond the peril of depending for daily support upon the uncertain continuance of his health and life. To the Clergy, to the Medical Men, to Lawyers, to Merchants—and others whose incomes depend, in a great measure upon their powers of healthy exertion. Also, to persons of limited stated incomes, the practice of Life Assurance recommends itself, not merely on a measure of expediency, but as a Bounden Duty.

The Boulogne Fetes.

From the London Times.

There was a continual succession of amusements here from morning until the close of night yesterday, and all the varied arrangements for giving the fullest effect to the festival were carried into effect in the most satisfactory manner. Of course, in France one could expect no less, for here all fetes of this kind, when once determined on, create a perfect furor among the population, and everyone cordially assists in giving them the most éclat to them. Hitherto, since the first announcement of the fetes, has been visited by vast numbers of the English, who have come here by the packets boats to amuse themselves at this gay festival. Within the last two days alone the arrivals from England have not fallen much short of 1,000 persons. About noon on Monday an excursion boat from Ramsgate came into the port excessively crowded with passengers, and as it rounded the pier head its arrival was welcomed with hearty cheers by a number of persons assembled on the pier.

In the morning of yesterday the National Guards belonging to Boulogne, and the other cities in France from which detachments had been sent, after mustering in the square in front of the Hotel de Ville, marched down to wards the sands. On reaching the quay they were drawn up in double line, which, as great was the number of men present, extended the whole length of the quay from the beginning of the pier to the market-place. The National Guards of Boulogne occupied the head of the line and bore with them the "drapeau" presented to them by the National Guards of Paris, which was remarkable for its elegance and richness. The whole body of National Guards here assembled were then inspected by the mayor and the rest of the municipal authorities, who, as they passed along the line, were saluted with acclamations of "Vive la Republique," "Vive la Liberté," &c. When the inspection terminated, the whole body marched back again to the Hotel de Ville, where they disbanded for the day; for by an alteration in the programme the firing at the targets for prizes was postponed from yesterday, for which it was originally fixed, until to-day. There were, however, plenty of games and gambols going on upon the sands, the long flat shore here affording a convenient field for such sports, and the jumping in sacks, donkey-races, &c., afforded continuous merriment and fun to the assembled spectators. At the same time the regatta was proceeding in the offing, and the movements of the sailing vessels and rowing-boats presented a pleasing sight to those who beheld the match from the pier or the cliffs. A slight accident tended for a moment to check the general satisfaction, but fortunately no fatal consequences resulted from it. A fishing-smack run down a four-oared cutter at the entrance of the harbour; but, though the boat was capsized, no other inconvenience, happily, ensued to the rowers beyond a sound ducking.

The decorations in the town are on an extensive a scale that they were scarcely completed last night; indeed, additions seem to be continually making to them. Although Sunday was a period of much gaiety here, yesterday was really the commencement of the fetes, and in the evening the whole of the streets were tastefully and prettily illuminated with paper lanterns of the different tints which form the national colour, and the effect produce by the appearance of long alleys of these fanciful and beautiful lights was really quite enchanting. Booths and platforms, covered with evergreens, were erected in the most prominent places, and instrumental bands stationed in them executed during the night a variety of music to the great delight of the promenaders, who crowded all the thoroughfares. At the theatre there was a performance gratis in the afternoon, and afterwards an interval of some hours a ball took place in the same building, but the admission to both these amusements was not upon the same easy terms, a few francs being necessary to obtain the entrée to the ball. A concert, at which Madame Thillon constituted one of the great attraction, was given in another part of the town; and there was again a public ball at the Tintelleries.

The directors of the Boulogne and Amiens Railway took the present opportunity of inviting the directors of the South Eastern line to a friendly dinner. Aspects of "fraternization" are so common now a days in France, we trust that this may be reckoned one of them, and the preliminary to a more satisfactory understanding between the two companies.

This morning the National Guards have been mustered by beat of drum, and have marched down to the sands to fire at the targets.

The English people will now have an opportunity of beholding the National Guards of France in uniform, without the necessity of a trip to this country for the purpose. Several left yesterday and to-day in full uniform, for London, Dover and Folkestone.

The French Navy.

The Constitutional contains some interesting facts relative to the French Navy. It sets out by reciting the Royal ordonnance of the 22d Nov., 1846, which fixed the naval peace establishment at 40 ships of the line (25 afloat and 16 on the stocks,) 50 frigates (40 afloat and 10 on the stocks,) 126 vessels of an inferior class afloat, 100 steam vessels (all afloat,) and two floating batteries with from 40 to 50 guns—Total, 329 ships. In November, 1846, the Navy board, in order to complete the projected establishment, had to construct about 17 ships of the line, 27 frigates, 85 inferior vessels, 32 steamboats, and 2 floating batteries. It demanded seven years and 93,000,000f (£3,720,000,) to execute the works. The delay and the money were granted. The year 1847 passed away in preparatory measures. The works in the arsenals were conducted slowly and confusedly. The expenses were ill calculated, and the sum voted for the wages of the operatives was exhausted before the conclusion of the works which those wages were intended to represent.—The money allotted for the purchase of materials was consequently applied to the payment of wages. In 1848 the naval administration appeared disposed to display more activity and more order. A statement of the construction to be executed during the present year, to make up for lost time, was laid before the public. It was satisfactory, but events prevented its accomplishment. The revolution of February took place, and the new Government lost sight of the navy in the midst of the difficulties which surrounded them. The Constitutionnel then goes on to show that none of the measures adopted by the Government of the Republic have tended to the advantage of the navy. The abolition of slavery in the French Colonies has forced 4,000 French seamen previously employed in the colonial trade to emigrate to the United States. Corporal punishment has been abolished in the French navy, and the efforts of the men have been increased at a cost of 1,900,000f. (£76,000,) for the year 1849, but that measure has not added a ship nor a seaman to the French navy. The French navy now consists of 24 sail of the line afloat, 38 frigates, and 86 steam vessels. Of these 24 ships of the line 12 require to be replaced in consequence of their age. Of the 38 frigates there are 19 condemned, and of the 86 steamboats not more than 70 are effective. The situation of the French fleet is, in fact, such as it was on the 1st of January, 1846.

AFFAIRS IN BADEN.

The insurrection in the Grand Duchy of Baden has been for the present suppressed, and the leader, Gustavus Struve, has been taken and shot, pursuant to martial law. It is now ascertained that another republican movement had been long contemplated—the failure of the previous one under the popular Hecker and the energetic Bonsteds not having damped the spirits of their partisans—and that the recent insurrection in Frankfort was the signal of the outbreak. No sooner was the movement in the above free city arrested, than the central executive turned their attention to Wurtemberg, Baden, and the two Hesses, and began to make the necessary military preparations for meeting the republicans in those states. Troops were first despatched to Baden, where the danger appeared most imminent, and these imperial troops, accompanied by the military force of that duchy itself, pushed on from Friburg to the little town of Staufen (about our German leagues from the former) they commenced the attack on the 24th of September on the republicans quartered in that place. After an obstinate contest, they defeated them, giving for a time no quarter. A part of the town on which the cannon played was set on fire. The insurgents were attacked in front and rear by the Bavarian, Austrian and Baden troops, so that escape was a matter of considerable difficulty. The fugitives were mercilessly cut down by the dragoons, who refused all quarter. The number of the Insurgents is variously given, being set down at 500 to 1600, including some 300 natives of Piedmont and the Italian cantons of Switzerland. The remainder of the disconfitted corps reached Mullheim, where the latest accounts left them preparing for a defence d'Poutraine. In that place, as well as in Lorrach and Schliengen, there are many determined republicans. A considerable portion of Baden, including all the so-called Bisenthal, has been placed under martial law. According to the Mannheim Abend Zeitung, the insurgents who retreated to Mullheim have raised entrenchments near that town.

In Struve's proclamations, issued from his headquarters at Lorrach on the 21st, he orders the abolition of all feudal dues and imposts (except, so far as the latter are concerned, those levied on the frontiers of Germany,) the introduction of an income tax, and the 10 per cent reductions of the custom dues in Baden. From Lorrach he marched with his adherents to Schliengen, and thence proceeded by the railway (of which he took possession) to Mullheim and Staufen, evacuee made in men and money—acquiring the latter by seizing the public treasuries.

It is not stated in the Frankfort and Baden papers whether it was at Staufen or at Kretzigen (where the insurgents were also defeated) that Struve was taken prisoner; but the Frankfort journals positively announce—and one in a semi-official manner—that he was shot on the morning of the 25th, pursuant to the sentence of a court martial. The same fate awaits 80 other prisoners—at least sentence of death has been recorded against them.

The report that Struve had been tried by court martial and shot, was premature and incorrect, it having been officially announced that the council of war assembled to try him, has declared itself incompetent, and that insurgent leader will therefore be tried by the ordinary tribunal.

THE CHOLERA AT HULL.

Three cases of cholera have occurred on board of a vessel now lying in this port. For some months past there has been lying in the old dock at this port a Prussian barque, named the Pallas, of Stettin, of which Mr. Muller is the Commander. He and the crew went home some months ago, leaving only the carpenter in charge. On Friday last, the master, with a crew of ten men, from Stralsund, Wismar, and the neighbourhood, arrived here by one of the steamers which left Hamburg yesterday week. It is known that the cholera had prevailed in the latter city for some weeks past, and it is known that the eating of fruit, and particularly of raw fruit, and more especially of stoned fruit, such as plums, has a tendency to predispose the stomach and bowels for attack of cholera
