INVESTING SUBMARINE EXPLORATIONS.

The New York Times of July 31 says:—For some experiments were made of a new form of diving bell, or sub-marine explorer, as its inventor chooses to call it, at the foot of 138th Street, East River, in the presence of a number of scientific and practical gentlemen, the results of which were highly satisfactory. The experiments made were in the vicinity of the wreck of the English frigate Hussar. This vessel formed part of the British fleet during the Revolutionary war, and on board of her was kept the money for the payment of the British troops. On the 25th November, 1780 (Evacuation Day), the officers of the vessel, fearing the vicinity of the French fleet, attempted to escape to sea by running the frigate up the East River. She however, on Pot Rock, at Hell Gate, and sustained serious damage. Her crew sailed her on for about a mile, to a place then known as Port Morris, now the foot of 138th Street, supposing that they could there find shallow water. However, they had unwittingly selected the deepest part of the river, the vessel lying seventy feet of water beneath her. A hawser was got out and made fast to an oak tree on the bank of the river, and in a few minutes afterward an alarm was raised that the vessel was sinking so rapidly did she settle down that officers were compelled to rush from their cabins, leaving their clothing and their swords, money and jewelled watches behind them. On the lower deck were eighty American prisoners in irons. No attempt was or could be made to save them, and every man, so far as known, perished. The hawser which had been made fast to the oak tree evertedly broke in upon the tree that it tore it from its roots. Not far from the spot where the vessel went down Governor Morris had an elegant mansion—a field of waving corn now waves over its site—where the accommodations for the night of the officers of the ill-fated Hussar. On behalf of these gentlemen in England a court martial was held, and from the evidence then given it appeared the Hussar had sunk at the time she sunk nine thousand George III. guineas, packed in fifty-two iron boxes in a strong wrapper, and built into the run of the ship. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the treasure is lying at the bottom of the river, to reward the luck or perseverance of some one.

In 1783 the English Government sent a vessel with men and implements, to raise the wreck; but after two seasons of labor they left. In 1819 they made another attempt to raise her with the powerful machinery known, but the divers were ordered off by the British Government, on the ground that the wreck and all she contained were prizes of war. The wreck was then allowed to lie for a time, but in 1848 other attempts were made to recover the treasure. An organization known as the Frigate Hussar Company, with which was connected Mr G. Phillips, the well-known diver, was formed, and constant attempts were made to recover the treasure without success. Up to 1857 the company had expended $60,000 in fruitless search. This company now made a contract with Messrs. W. R. Taylor and J. Weesse, owners of the submarine diving bell, to raise the treasure of the Hussar for a percentage of thirty per cent. The company was chartered by the State. The explorations in and around the wreck of the Hussar, which have been made from time to time, have resulted in the discovery of the officers' swords, which were in their cabins, a superb gold jewelled and silver snuff-box of lignum vitæ, a gold coin, 125 guineas, 56 cannon, and a number of muskets, bullets, bearing the name Hussar, bottles and flints. Several skeletons were found on the wrists have also been found. Of the cannon raised, two were presented to the English Government, and are still to be seen in the arsenal at Central Park.

Visitors a day are now made to the bell of the submarine explorer. So far nothing has been discovered. The treasure is supposed to be beneath the stone ballast of which the frigate had many tons on board. This ballast is supposed to have turned over, but this is a work of much money and much patience and skill. Much money and much patience will be required before the treasure is brought to light.

Since the stern post of the vessel was found, and this acted as a guide to the divers in prosecuting their researches, it is thought, however, who ought to have been better, tore it down, and now the divers are left to make their explorations in the manner they can beneath seven fathoms of water. Yesterday one descent was made at about two o'clock in the afternoon, when the bell reached the bottom in forty minutes and was allowed to remain about an hour and a quarter, when the bell descended, bringing with them some old flints, copper nails, &c., and the report is that they believed that they had found wood. The explorer acted to perfection, and the divers declared they experienced no inconvenience whatever during their submersion.

The works energetically sometimes. It is proposed to build a railroad from Koursk to Taganrog. Nearly 40,000 workmen on the line to do the work.

The exportations of books are measured by the pound. The amount last year was 49,906 hundred-weight, a considerable increase over any previous year.

It is considered so necessary in Bengal that girls young that bridegrooms are tempted with a dower. The price varies according to qualifications, and the president of a native paper received by the last mail lately revealed the curious fact that the highest of these is a University degree. The lad who would have accepted $100, if he has a degree demands and always gets it. Fathers in fact bargain with one another, and the lucky holder of a diploma is as it were put up to auction. Of course the bidders are a good deal influenced by an idea that a candidate for marriage with a diploma will be favoured in Government, but there is something else. Bengalees respect intelligence above birth but pedigree, and they see in the diploma an honest and through test of it—one which is extremely creditable to the University examiners.

EFFECT OF ADVERTISING.—It is amusing at times to observe the stores of the merchants who don't advertise: to see the anxious proprietors looking into the streets and see the people go by, wondering why they don't come in, while the stores of their neighbours who do advertise are thronged with customers. Some people will learn by observation, others will not.—Daily Palladium.

MANUFACTURERS OF

GRAND OVERSTRUNG SQUARE

PIANOS,

Corner of King & Princess Streets

KINGSTON, ONTARIO.

RAPPE, WEBER, & Co. announce to the Public that they are now in possession of facilities for manufacturing Pianos unsurpassed, if equalled, by any in the Dominion.

The members of the Firm are Practical Piano Makers, and are anxious to establish their success in manufacturing enterprise by careful workmanship rather than by mere speculation. They are able skilfully to superintend every department, and are prepared to guarantee every instrument they sell.

For strength of manufacture and materials, beauty of finish and durability and excellence of tone, they challenge the Dominion to produce superior instruments; and while they claim for their work every excellence that can be expected from skilful and enterprising workmen, they beg to announce that their resources are sufficiently ample to enable them to compete in prices with any speculator in Pianos.

The Subscribers keep no Travelling Agent. All orders addressed to the Subscribers, or sent through any respectable Music Dealer, will receive attention. Orders through mail will be attended to as if selected in person.
