EXTRAORDINARY CASE.

A case which might have served as the framework of "Aurora Floyd," and which presents the element of mystery in that popular novel, has just turned up in the Queen's Court. A girl of fifteen, the daughter of a city banker, was thrown a great deal into the society of a young man of twenty-seven, engaged in her father's establishment as an indoor servant, and became attached to him. The intimacy was suspected by the parents, and the youth dismissed. Soon afterwards the girl left home, and made a clandestine marriage with her lover at a country parish church, returned to her father the same day, and cohabiting with her husband at all, the parents brought the present suit to have the marriage declared null on the ground, among other reasons, that there was a total irregularity in the publication of the banns. The jury found for the parties as to the facts alleged; but the question of law involved will have to be argued, and it still remains to be seen whether by the private law of England this child is a bastard in any sense of the word. It is altogether a painful case, and perhaps it indicates a common defect somewhere in the relations between parents and children. The girl, as a letter sent to her mother proved, was sincerely attached to the young fellow, and it is equally clear that the kindness on the part of her parents prevented her to seek sympathy in the servants'

The real safeguard against such catastrophes as that which befell the banker's daughter is to be found in the encouragement of children to confide in their parents. In many English families there is such rigidity in one direction and too much laxity in another. A daughter is repelled from anything like confidence by her father and mother, and yet no check is placed on her intercourse with domestics. The banker's daughter had sought the society of her parents, probably she would have turned to a man servant—after all, she shrank from following

A SAD STORY.

Those who have been around the central depots at night have doubtless observed a gentleman, dignified in appearance, and evidently superior to such surroundings, at some time past has been seeking employment there. He has a strange history and an experience in life that possesses the singularity of romance. Before the war he was a planter in Texas, and possessed immense wealth. His deposits in the Bank of this city at one time were $100,000 in gold. His landed estates covered over leagues of territory, and he owned a German principality than the dominions of an American planter. His official seat was the seat of ease and he, and a family of children added greatly to his home, and gave an incentive to the accumulation of wealth. On the breaking out of the war he went to Europe; but before leaving he made his will, and signed papers which placed the property in the hands of his son and son-in-law. This was done that in case of his death there should be no trouble about the disposition of his estate. At the end of the war he came back, but his absence had given to his children a control of wealth which did not mean to surrender. They refused to recognize him, or permit him to have even a small pittance with which to begin life. A difficulty occurred between the father and son, in which the latter was struck by the arm and dangerously wounded. The incarcerated was the outraged parent and he even expressed his regret that the life of his offspring had not been sacrificed. The case came to this city, and instituted proceedings for the recovery of some property which he has in this State. Pending the slow developments of the courts, without money and without friends, this man, nearly 80 years of age, is compelled to seek shelter at the police station, the daughter of his, residing in a princely mansion not a dozen squares away, enjoys the luxury that immense wealth and unlimited resources can secure. Is not his story stranger than fiction?—New Orleans Times.

THE PRUSSIAN ARMY.

An article in the Cornhill Magazine for the month, entitled "a Prussian soldier's life in the Prussian army," gives us a deep insight into the admirable conduct of this excellent institution. Excellent as this management for military purposes, although it must certainly be regarded as retarding greatly the progress of society. "To make an obnoxious institution popular," says the writer, "it requires not to make the people believe it the creation of their own creation. This end has wonderfully succeeded in the Nine Prussians out of ten glory in it, but the tenth hates it with a hatred." And to judge from the tone of the article, the writer is evidently one of the latter. One great stroke of policy is the Prussian Government, is the fact that nearly all Government appointments not requiring special or superior talent are at the disposal of soldiers who have served a certain number of years, or by some special cause, have obtained a place on the Government. Policemen, forest guards, custom house officers, and a multitude of town officials are chosen from the non-commissioned officers, while all offices are reserved to the commissioned officers. And in this way the Government collects round it a host of dependents who are every way subservient to its will. The writer, who is a retired in England, is very irate with the Government he received while serving in the army, and apparently does not regret escape from the thraldom. Any one living at the Prussian army estimates be astonished at the enormous expense it lays on its account. "Everything appertaining to the military, and the salaries of public officials are absolutely extravagant corresponding in rank to an English county court judge receives a salary with which any ordinary merchant's family would be dissatisfied." The Bismarckian theory is all very well so long as the people are willing to support it, but it is a great question as to how long that will continue will last. In all probability the reaction against the heavy military expenses arose from some pressure of this

EFFECT OF ADVERTISING.—It is amusing at times to observe the stores of the merchants who don't advertise; to see the anxious proprietors looking into the streets and see the people go by, wondering why they don't come in, while the stores of their neighbours who do advertise are thronged with customers. Some people will learn by observation, others will not.—Daily Palladium.

RAPPE, WEBER, & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

GRAND OVERSTRUNG SQUARE PIANOS,

Corner of King & Princess Streets

KINGSTON, ONTARIO.

RAPPE, WEBER, & Co. announce to the Public that they are now in possession of facilities for manufacturing Pianos unsurpassed, if equalled, by any in the Dominion.

The members of the Firm are Practical Piano Makers, and are anxious to establish their success in manufacturing enterprise by careful workmanship rather than by mere speculation. They are able skilfully to superintend every department, and are prepared to guarantee every instrument they sell.

For strength of manufacture and materials, beauty of finish, and durability and excellence of tone, they challenge the Dominion to produ
